in India his representations, although backed by the medical authorities, were made in vain, and the result was that not only were the rates of mortality enhanced by the youth of the recruits sent out, but the safety of our Indian possessions was in some degree imperilled. Contrasting the practice of England in taking army recruits of eighteen with that of the great Continental States, he pointed to the recent war as showing the danger of trusting to armies of very young men. He suggested as one mode of solving the problem that recruits might be taken for the militia at eighteen, and for the regular army at twenty, and that the former, when of the requisite age, should periodically be invited to fill the vacancies in the Line. Lord Sandhurst concluded an effective maiden speech by expressing his agreement with the principle of short service. At the same time, he hoped that it would be guarded by due conditions.—Lord NORTHBROOK gave explanations relative to the orders, and stated that arrangements had been made for transferring recruits who were physically unfit to go to India to other battalions at home. He also adverted to the measures in preparation for employing the army reserve and pensioners in the Post-office and as copyists in the Government offices. It would be unwise to lay down any statutory limit of age on enlistment. The army had been increased by 20,000 men within six months, and this sudden expansion had been necessarily attended by a certain deterioration in the physical capacity of the recruits.—The Duke of CAMBRIDGE remarked upon the difficulty of adapting a system of conscription to the circumstances of an enlisted army. Agreeing with Lord Sandhurst that recruits should not be taken before twenty, if they could then be obtained, he pointed out that at that age in England a young man had generally settled down to some occupation, and that it was necessary to bid for his services at an earlier age. The suggestion that young men of eighteen should first be passed through the Militia deserved consideration, but numbers were disposed to go into the Militia who refused to enter the Line. There was a great pressure upon the Government to create an army reserve as rapidly as possible, and it was impossible to form such reserve unless the men passed through the regular army. It was essential to have a large leaven of old soldiers, and from that principle there was no intention to depart. He felt that frequent changes in the mode and term of enlistment were most objectionable, but the Government were now endeavouring by tentative measures to obtain an army reserve, and it was his duty to give them an earnest support in their military measures, while pointing out the interests of the service and of the individual soldier.—The Duke of RICHMOND, after paying a graceful compliment to Lord Sandhurst, said he entirely concurred with him as to the effect of the general orders, and cited the case of the 54th Regiment, under orders to leave England for India next September. This regiment was 924 strong, but half the soldiers were under twenty years of age. The large proportion of youths among our recruits demanded serious attention.—Lord KIMBERLEY stated that the Secretary of War was making arrangements under which no soldiers would be sent out to India under twenty, a bounty of one gnniea being offered to men of and above that age who would volunteer for India. He defended the War-office against some of the animadversions of the Duke of Richmond.—Lord GREY said that Napoleon and all the great generals agreed that boy-recruits only broke down under fatigue and filled the hospitals. After the warnings the Government had received it was a proof of great mismanagement that a regiment should be under orders for India with half its men under twenty. He accepted the principle of an army reserve, but regretted that the measures necessary to place the country in a state of security had not been framed in a more statesmanlike spirit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, June 5.—THE ARMY BILL IN COMMITTEE.—Resuming the consideration of Clause 3, the first amendment disposed of was moved by Sir PERCY HERBERT, and its object was to secure for officers serving on full pay all sums which they have spent on their commissions, to be repaid either on leaving the service, or at the death to their heirs, or sooner if the Secretary for War thinks fit; but the capital sum to bear interest at 3½ per cent. until it is repaid. After some little opposition, the amendment was withdrawn.—The next amendment was moved by Sir G. JENKINSON, and proposed to give purchase officers interest at 4 per cent. on the regulation price of their commissions until the time of their retirement. This amendment, like the preceding, was, after a brief discussion, withdrawn.—An amendment moved by Sir W. RUSSELL, entitling officers who are invalided by a medical board to receive regulation and over-regulation prices, was briefly opposed by Mr. CARDWELL, and on a division the committee rejected it by a majority of 68—259 to 191.—At this point the further progress of the Bill in committee was adjourned, with the understanding that there would be no opposition to morning sittings after Friday, June 9.

HOUSE OF LORDS, THURSDAY, June 8.—ARMY SERVICE IN INDIA.—The Earl of LONGFORD moved that an humble address be presented to her Majesty for the following return: Estimate of the number of soldiers above twenty years of age who will be required as volunteers from corps of all arms at home to complete the establishments of corps and of drafts ordered to proceed to India in the season 1871-72.—After some observations from Lord HARDINGE, Lord SANDHURST asked whether it was proposed, in the case of regiments about to embark for India in the relief season of 1871-72, that all men under twenty years of age were to be left in this country, and that men were to be transferred from other regiments to the corps about to leave for India; if that were done the result of such an operation extensively carried out must be to disorganise the regiments from which the men were taken.—Lord NORTHBROOK said that the Secretary of State for War had given orders that, as far as possible, no men under twenty years of age should go out to India, and that their places in the regiments ordered for service in that country should be filled by volunteers from other regiments; this might, no doubt, occasion a little temporary disorganisation of some regiments; but that could hardly be set against the efficiency of the army and the saving of the lives of the men, both of which would be promoted by the regulations now adopted. There was no objection to grant the returns asked for with a slight modification.—After some further conversation, in the course of which Lord SANDHURST said he was in possession of returns relating to the recruiting for nineteen regiments, which showed that the Government would encounter great difficulty in carrying out the plans they had adopted, the motion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, June 8.—THE 65TH REGIMENT.—In reply to Captain TALBOT, Mr. CARDWELL stated that the 65th Regiment had been stationed at Agra in April last, on its arrival in India. The regiment, he was informed, was 919 strong, and of these 597 were under twenty years of age. The regiment, before it left England, had been inspected by the Deputy-Inspector-General of the Army Medical Department, and the men were reported to be fit for foreign service. In consequence of having received reports on the early age at which men had gone to India, he had now given directions which were intended to secure that none should go under twenty years of age, and that, as far as possible, none should go till till they were twenty-two years of age.

INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE FURLOUGHS.—Mr. GRANT DUFF said, in reply to Mr. A. BASS, that a despatch had been sent out to India by the Secretary of State in Council, asking the Governor-General's opinion as to certain changes in the furlough and sick-leave rules, but no reply had yet been received; when it was received the despatch might be produced.

ARMY REGULATION BILL.—When the House got into Committee upon the Army Regulation Bill, Mr. RYLANDS moved an amendment in the third clause restricting the payment to be made to officers to the regulation prices of their commissions, and the discussion upon the proposal occupied nearly the whole evening.—The provision of the Bill recognising over-regulation prices was warmly defended by Sir G. GALEY, who was the chairman of the Commission which inquired into the subject, as well as by Mr. W. HUNT, one of its members, and as stoutly resisted by Mr. VERNON HARCOURT, who maintained that there could be no property in a violation of the law, and no vested interest in a misdemeanour.—When it is added that Colonel DYOTT, speaking as a militia officer, supported the amendment, almost all has been said that need be said, except that upon a division the amendment was negatived by a majority of 177—285 to 108.—In the course of Mr. CARDWELL'S speech, Capt. VIVIAN placed a small slip of paper upon the "red" box, but—with the fear of Sir J. Pakington before him—as soon as its contents had been read by the right hon. gentleman, he withdrew it and tore it into small pieces.—When the numbers were announced Mr. ANDERSON challenged the validity of the votes of officers on full pay, on the ground that they had a "direct pecuniary interest" in the result of the division, but Mr. DODSON decided that the interest referred to in the order cited by the member for Glasgow was a "private pecuniary interest;" that the vote to be challenged must not relate to a question of public policy like that before the Committee, and this ruling, which was loudly cheered by the Opposition, was at once acquiesced in by Mr. ANDERSON.—Sir TOLLEMACHE SINCLAIR occupied some time in pressing the claims of the widows and orphans of officers who die in the service; but though he called upon members "as they should answer to God" to support an amendment which he proposed with a view to give effect to these claims, Sir H. STORKS, on the part of the Government, refused to accede to his proposal, and before any decision had been pronounced upon it progress was reported.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, June 9.—ARMY REGULATION BILL.—The discussion of the Army Bill was resumed by Sir TOLLEMACHE SINCLAIR, whose proposal to secure the value of their commissions to the widows and orphans of officers dying in the service was under consideration when progress was reported on Thursday night, and who repeated, in almost identical terms, the speech which he then addressed to the Committee in its support.—After a good deal of talk the amendment was rejected by a majority of 56—186 to 130.—At the instance of Mr. CARDWELL, the limitation of the number of officers who should be allowed to sell out during any one year was omitted from the third clause; but the section had not been disposed of when the sitting was suspended.

NAUTICAL INCIDENTS.

The Maibit, Popken, from Amsterdam to Batavia, was in collision on June 7, and had jibboom and sails carried away, rails split, bows stove, and received other damage.

The headboard of the Mountain Laurel, of Liverpool, which sailed from Penarth May 25, for Batavia, was picked up on the beach of Hayle, June 7.

The Amiral Gourbeyre, Viand, from Saigon, went ashore at Capetown during a northerly wind, on the night of March 30, but was towed off next morning. She has since discharged all her cargo, in order to go on the patent slip for repairs.

A bottle was found on April 27, washed ashore on the Zietzekama coast. It contained a paper, on which the following was written:—"Barque Havelock, from Singapore to London, out fifty-two days, all well. We have been on the coast for five days, with variable winds and fine weather. Whoever finds this will please report the same as may be most convenient.—W. C. MADDEN, Master. Spirit of the Home Journals.

HERAT.

The Daily News observes that the capture of Herat comes in the nick of time, just as an excitable but careless public was recovering from the shock of the "Battle of Dorking." Happily, with an Empire on which the sun never sets, we ought never to be without an occasion for alarm. When the fit of panic is subsiding, and the fit of parsimony is coming on, there is always an abundant reserve of wars and rumours of wars, of invasions, and conquests, and other terrible contingencies, to be found on the frontiers of our Indian Empire, and, indeed, wherever a few Anglo-Indians, on leave or retired, are met together. One word is enough to arouse a host of prophets of the decline and fall of England. When all our neighbours in Europe are prostrate from defeat or satiety of glory, there is always Herat for our alarmists to fall back upon. Herat is always being captured or besieged; and this time there seems to be no doubt that it has been well and truly captured by the disobedient and unruly son of that Affghan Chief to whom the Governor-general was paying compliments and making presents in the name of the Queen a few months ago. According to Professor Vambery, who knew him personally, this Yakoob Khan, who has lately captured the fortress of Herat, through the treachery of the garrison, has always detested from his earliest childhood the English, their alliance, and their influence in the affairs of Affghanistan. Hence his absence from the Durbar of Umballah, and his refusal of the gifts presented by Lord Mayo on behalf of the Queen. Hence his rebellion against his worthy father, the friend and ally of England, and his attack on Herat, which, we are told, owed its success to "Persian support and to Persian friendship." Surely here are the elements of a very pretty quarrel, if we only know how to make the most of them. Another Affghan expedition and another little Persian war, the recapture of Herat, and the vindication of our friend Shere Ali Khan's parental authority, and the protection of his menaced sovereignty in Cabul—here is work cut out for many months or years, unless the Government of India should leave Shere Ali Khan to fight it out on his own account with his rebellious son, and be content to keep a strict and sure watch upon its own Affghan borders, without risking a man or a rupee beyond them. Such a policy would argue, perhaps, a degeneracy in our Indian statecraft, and would be almost on a level with the ignoble prudence or pusillanimity nearer home which declined to send an army to raise the German siege of Paris. But we are not sure that even some Anglo-Indians whose names are not usually associated with national degeneracy might not prefer such a policy to a second Affghan campaign, or to that indefinite amount and quality of intervention in Affghan affairs which the "lending a hand" to Shere Ali Khan would involve.

GENERAL BARROW AND THE TALOOKDARS OF OUDH.—The following letter from the Officiating Junior Secretary to the Chief Comissioner, Oudh, to the Secretary British Indian Association of Oudh, is dated Lucknow, 11th May, 1871 :—"Sir,—I am directed by General Barrow to acknowledge the receipt of the letter of the British Indian Association of Oudh, of the 9th instant, intimating the wish of certain talookdars as representatives of that body to escort him to Bombay. I have to express to you, that while General Barrow is highly sensible of the honour the talookdars wish to do him, yet he hopes that in this instance they will be pleased to consult his wishes as they have always done. As the journey to Bombay would be attended not only with great expense, but discomfort, to the talookdars, General Barrow would ask them to relinquish their intention of accompanying him to the port of embarkation. They can do him a greater favour, and please him much more, in other ways. For instance, he trusts that the talookdars will continue to keep their character for showing consideration to those under them. General Barrow's experience of Oude talookdars has been that they do respect the ancient customs of the country and fully admit the prescriptive rights of their tenants and others. If then the talookdars do desire to confer any favour on General Barrow, he would ask that during his absence they will so act that he may have no reason to change this opinion. In now taking farewell he would again impress upon them, as he had already so often done, that if they wish to be prosperous themselves, they should assist their tenants, and maintain them in their holdings. In conclusion, General Barrow thanks the talookdars for the assistance they have ever given to himself, and feels that he can hand down over to his successor with every confidence that they will give him the same aid, and be on all occasion ready to carry out the wishes of the Government, who have always respected their rights and placed them in the high position they now hold.—I have, &c., F. BARROW, Officiating Junior Secretary to the Commissioner of Oude."

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

BY S. BERTRAM BROWNE,

Sergeant-major London Rifle Brigade, late First-class Sergeant-Instructor School of Musketry, Hythe.

Author of "A Companion to New Rifle Musket," &c.

Second Edition, with Additions.

To be had of all Booksellers.

PROFESSIONAL OPINIONS

SUPPORTING AND RECOMMENDING THIS SYSTEM.

March, 1871.

I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of recommending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.

C. M. MILNER, M.D.,
Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. BROWNE,—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be overrated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out at all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys.

H. EYRE, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.

For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of quickness and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the Government shall wisely insist upon every child being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.

Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere martinet. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly, have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.

It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and, therefore, succeeds admirably.

JAMES RUNTZ, Head Master.

Kingsland Middle Class Schools, Sandringham-road, March 7, 1871.

Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites of youth, and if such exercise be conducted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor; but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained, the result will be all that can be desired.

ROBERT LANE, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon this physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To ensure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good disciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of these qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.

THOMAS WILSON, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies, Benyon-house, 32, Culford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their schoolfellows, a point too frequently overlooked, when a large number are being drilled.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

WRONGS MADE RIGHT.—Every day that any bodily suffering is permitted to continue renders it more certain to become chronic or dangerous. Holloway's purifying, cooling, and strengthening Pills are well adapted for any irregularity of the human body, and should be taken when the stomach is disordered, the liver deranged, the kidneys inactive, the bowels torpid, or the brain muddled. With this medicine every invalid can cure himself, and those who are weak and infirm through imperfect digestion, may make themselves strong and stout by Holloway's excellent Pills. A few doses of them usually mitigate the most painful symptoms caused by undigested food, from which they thoroughly free the alimentary canal, and completely restore its natural power and action.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff)

CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. WOOD stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Remedial Uses and Action.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

Extracts from Medical Opinions.

The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—"Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed."

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—"Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not 'supply a want and fill a place.'"

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—"So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases."

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.

CAUTION.—None genuine without the words "Dr. J. Collis Browne" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, May 27; Agra and Madras, May 25; Calcutta, May 24.

THE first meeting of the Viceroy's Legislative Council at Simlah came off on the 12th May, when Mr. F. Stephen introduced his Session Courts Bill forBengal. His demand for urgency in passing the Bill was prompted by the discovery of a very loose screw in the administrative machinery of Bengal and the North-West Provinces. Mr. Stephen regretted to own that all the appointments of all the Sessions Judges in those provinces have been illegal, and all the trials before them have been irregular and legally invalid, "certainly since the year 1868, and probably since the year 1829." This unpleasant state of things was discovered in the course of certain inquiries, made for the purpose of consolidating and simplifying the law on Criminal Courts. Mr. Stephen's Bill, which he himself regards as "a piece of patchwork," a mere makeshift pending the completion of a general Courts Act for all India, merely provides a legal sanction for what has hitherto been done unwittingly against the law, and empowers the rulers of the two provinces in question to appoint Sessions Judges and Additional Sessions Judges within their respective Governments, and to classify and vary the limits of their jurisdictions. In the course of the district explanation, Mr. Stephen enlarged on the absolute need of [illegible]ring under one head the various laws which for nearly a century have remained scattered up and down volumes of loosely worded regulations, and held out the prospect of an early riddance from complications which only a "pettifogging pleader" could logically wish to perpetuate. The Bill was passed that day through all its stages. At the next meeting, on the 19th May, Mr. Cockerell introduced a Bill to bring the Dehra Doon within the working of the General Regulations and Acts.

THE establishment of the long-projected Department of Agriculture and Commerce has at length been sanctioned by the Secretary for India, and the new Department is announced to begin work at once under the headship of Mr. A. O. Hume, whose name has so often of late been designated for that post.

THE trial of the Patna prisoners had again been postponed until the 30th May. The reason why is not given, but we are told that Messrs. Chisholm Anstey and Pigot, who are retained for the defence, will receive respectively a thousand and five hundred rupees a-day during the trial.

THE hunt after coal in the Godavery Circle is described as being but moderately successful. The first attempt at Madaran bearing small fruit, the search was renewed on the British side of the river, and there coal was found at a depth of forty-one feet. The coal thus struck appeared to be in two beds, each three feet thick, with six feet of shale lying between them. The extent of the coal beds at Tiperpenti has yet to be ascertained, but Mr. Blanford, who is still exploring thereabouts, is expected to report upon them ere long.

HAPPILY for dwellers in England it is not easy fully to realise the terrible force of a whirlwind in the tropics, although our papers sometimes contain wonderful stories of haystacks flying some distance through the air. Even haystacks however excite our scepticism, rather than our sympathy. What shall we say then to a story borne from Coconada, on the Coromandel Coast, and accepted as true by the Madras Mail? It appears that a number of thatched houses, trees, and a whole herd of cattle with its herdsman were caught up on the 16th May by a fearful whirlwind from a village on the Pittapore Estate, and carried a good way through the air. Hailstones "as big as wood apples" fell during the storm. In proof of the unwonted flight through the air we are told that the herdsman was found dead in a tank outside the village, and that the corpses of the cattle were "scattered about within a radius of one to two miles." What became of the trees and houses we have not been able to ascertain.

THE circumstances of Major Way's death appear to be still involved in some mystery. Major Ross, who succeeds him in the Muscat Agency, reports that as nobody witnessed the sad accident, the circumstances attending it remain unexplained. It is possible therefore that the gun with which he shot himself may have gone off by accident. Be that as it may, his death, according to Major Ross, "caused deep and universal sorrow" in Muscat. "All classes endeavoured to show the respect and esteem they felt for Major Way," and Sayad Turki had ordered a general mourning for him throughout the city. That same ruler by the way is described as prospering exceedingly, only three chiefs of any mark having refused to obey him. One of his first reforms in Muscat is a decree forbidding the importation of slaves into any part of his dominions. If he means to enforce that decree, the cause of humanity will have gained by the latest revolution in Muscat.

THE new Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has won the hearts of the natives by opening his doors to them regularly once a week. With his own countrymen however in the Civil Service Mr. Campbell has been not quite so fortunate. His preferment of Mr. Bernard from the Central Provinces Commission to a seat in the Bengal Council has given deep offence, it seems, to many a civil servant in Bengal Proper, who deems the whole service slighted by the preference of an outsider to himself or his friend. Whether Mr. Campbell could have made a better choice from among the civilians just now serving in Bengal, we cannot say; but is not Mr. Bernard also a Bengal civilian?

LORD NAPIER, he of Madras, has lately been inviting local criticism by another of those æsthetic discourses which distinguish him from all other governors of Indian provinces. His theme this time was painting, on which he had much to say, and said it with his usual grace of style, and justness of perception. All that he said of course had a special bearing on that branch of Art in which India has hitherto least shone. Lamenting the barrenness of the ground in respect of Indian painting, he argued from the few samples still remaining in Southern India, that a turn for painting might be developed in the native mind by due encouragement from above. To that end he would ask the Indian Government to furnish promising students with the means of cultivating their talent in the great art-centres of Paris, Rome, and London. This idea of government aid stirs the scepticism of the Madras Mail, which denies that India can be taught or bribed to develop an excellence which comes by Nature only. The Madras Times on the other hand takes his Lordship's part, and sees no reason why India with fair encouragement should not tread in the footsteps of Italy, whose first essays in painting were no better than the frescoes at Seringapatam. For our part we are inclined to think that a people who have always shown so much of the Italian feeling for beautiful forms, and whose eye for colour is unsurpassed anywhere, might be taught to express those same intuitions in the field of pictorial art.

IT is rumoured in high quarters that the need for an expedition against the Loshais will be obviated by the measures taken to open out roads and establish posts on the frontier. People are asking accordingly whether no punishment at all is to be inflicted on the authors of the recent raids. Mr. Winchester's little girl has been ransomed from her captors for a few hundred rupees.

THERE is much murmuring in Oudh at the decree which abolished the post of Financial Commissioner. A Lucknow paper declares that one of the richest provinces in India has thus been left without an ultimate court of appeal in suits concerning land. Since the Chief Commissioner will never have time to overhaul the decisions of his subordinates, there is every prospect, we are told, of an ugly rush of appeals to that over-ripe institution, the Privy Council. This is said to be all the more certain because, of the four Commissioners who now wield in Oudh the powers of High Court Judges elsewhere, two belong to the Staff Corps, one is a Bengal Civilian, and the fourth an Uncovenanted Officer.

ACCORDING to the latest telegrams Yakoob Khan continues master of Herat.

THE letter we publish in another column will serve to clear up any misconceptions which our recent remarks on the state of things at Port Blair might possibly have raised in the minds of some readers, who were not aware that Colonel Ford had left the Andamans at least three years ago. As our remarks were founded on the results of a recent judicial inquiry at Calcutta, they necessarily referred to the time just past only; to the time when Colonel Man was still Governor of those islands. Whoever is to blame for the strange mismanagement disclosed at the Calcutta trial, we had no idea of implicating Colonel Man's predecessor therein. That there has been gross mismanagement of the sort described by us cannot be disputed, unless the Indian journals have strangely misreported what took place at the trial.

DR. GOLDSTUCKER'S interesting paper on Deficiencies in the Present Administration of Hindu Law, which was read last year before the East Indian Association, has, we are glad to see, been published as a separate pamphlet by Messrs. Trübner and Co. It is full of telling illustrations of the difficulties and miscarriages of justice caused by mistranslations in the English versions of Hindu law-books. Through errors of this sort judgments wholly at variance with the real principles of Hindu law have repeatedly been delivered. Dr. Goldstücker calls for a thorough revision of all existing translations of Hindu law texts, and also for the immediate translation of several important works that still remain accessible only to Sanskrit scholars. We hope that timely attention will be given to his demands.

ONE good thing that must ensue from the passage of the Army Bill, as it now stands, is a reconsideration of the claims of old Indian officers to fair compensation for their lost bonuses. In the face of the concessions made by the Government to purchase and non-purchase officers alike, it has become impossible to enforce the rules laid down by Lord Cranborne for the adjustment of claims in every way stronger than those which the House of Commons has just been settling. It may now be taken for granted that the purchase officers will get back the "full saleable value" of their commissions at a certain date, that is the illegal market value as well as the old regulation value. Thanks to Sir C. Wingfield, Clause IV., which concerns the new Line Regiments only, has been altered in the interests of equal justice to the non-purchase officers concerned. The "unimportant" amendment, as it was called in some of the daily papers, simply secures to these officers the whole difference between a show of fair play and the reality. By that amendment they have been placed on the very same footing in respect of compensation as their comrades in the purchase regiments. They are to get "compensation equal to the sums they would have received—according to the custom of the regiment—from the junior officers of their regiments, had they retired therefrom" before the day when the Army Bill becomes law. In other words, they will get, not the poor balance of their own former payments, after deducting the advantages of quickened promotion and so on, but the full amount of the bonus they would at this moment receive for the value of their own steps, if these were in the market. We congratulate them on a result which simply extends to them, as a logical necessity, the boon already conferred on the purchase officers. The bonus in the one case, in the other the extra regulation prices, have thus been legalised in the moment of their extinction. Apply the same principle to the claims of Indian officers, and we cannot see how the Government can help conceding them full compensation, not for their own payments towards the buying out of seniors, but for "the sums they would have received from the junior officers of their regiments, had they retired therefrom" before February, 1861, the date of the final formation of the Indian Staff Corps. Their claims, be it remembered, are as much stronger than those of the Queen's officers, as the authoritative sanctions under which the bonus system flourished in the Indian Army were morally and legally stronger than the tacit connivance of the English War Office at the illegal development of the Purchase System in her Majesty's Army. Their old rights, privileges, and expectations, moreover, were formally guaranteed to them by two Acts of Parliament, whose meaning cannot be explained away. In the face of such considerations, it seems idle to plead the poverty of the Indian Exchequer as a bar to equal justice for both services. The officers in question want nothing but fair compensation. They would waive the question of interest on their claims, if only those claims were adjusted on the fair and broad principle laid down by the amended Army Bill. We cannot believe that the India Office will show itself less just and reasonable in this matter than the framers and revisers of the English Army Bill.

NOTHING could well have been worse timed than Mr. Fawcett's motion for a Royal Commission to inquire into the subjects already bespoken for the Select Committee on Indian Finance. He meant well, no doubt, and to judge from the reports of his speech, had no idea of working against the Committee of which he is a member. The Commission he seems to have regarded as supplemental, not antagonistic, to the Committee. But the general tenor of his remarks, and the time chosen for uttering them, certainly laid him open to some at least of the strictures which Mr. Grant Duff fired off at Jotte with no inexpert hand. As the Under-Secretary [illegible]cluding brus[illegible]mes-street, [illegible]cett's apologised for his quite superfluous attack on Mr. personal honour, we need say no more on that point. Mr. Fawcett, for his part, is too impatient. A Committee which has to go over a vast amount of preliminary matter cannot be expected in a few months to have made much apparent progress towards the real end of its existence. It remains to see whether all needful information can be obtained from witnesses in this country, before the question of taking evidence in India can be fairly mooted. One good thing however resulted from Mr. Fawcett's motion. Mr. G. Duff admitted that the question of consultative councils must come in time before the Committee, and he threw out to the Calcutta grumblers a meaning assurance, that if the Supreme Government could not spend its summers in the Hills, its winters would certainly not be spent in Calcutta.

THE utter collapse of the highest Court of Appeal for all British subjects drew last Thursday from Lord Westbury some biting comments on a state of things disgraceful to the British people. The arrears of business before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council grow heavier year by year. It will take two years of steady work, says Lord Westbury, to clear off the accumulations of last year alone, and by that time what a mountain of fresh arrears will have sprung up in its turn! Lord Hatherley's answer in effect admitted everything, although he tried to gloss over the real state of things with regard to Indian appeals. It is not for want of skilled copyists that four or five years elapse before Indian appeals reach this country, but simply because it would be waste of time and money to send them over any sooner on the chance of an early hearing. A very large proportion of the Indian suits comes over, it seems, from Bengal, and most of these might probably be settled in India, if no appeal to England were allowed on questions of fact. Nevertheless it is a crying scandal that nothing should have yet been done to expedite business through the Privy Council, and we can hardly wonder that the disgust thereat of our Australian colonists should break out in threats of starting a local High Court of Appeal for themselves. Such a step would virtually sever the last link that binds the colonies to the mother-country. India can hardly take a similar revenge, but must feel thankful if she has not to pay heavily towards the establishment of a properly constituted court in England. We hope that Lord Westbury will not let the matter drop this year, whether the Lord Chancellor is ready with a Bill or no.

WE are glad to see that Surgeon-Major Atchison's useful little pamphlet on "Small-pox Encampments" (Richards, 1871) has reached a second edition in a few weeks. The letters of which it chiefly consists were addressed to the Times during last March, when the spread of small-pox in London was causing serious alarm, which the measures since taken to check the disease have not done much as yet to allay. The death-rate from small-pox still keeps up at a figure ominously high, in spite of the efforts made to bring it down to its normal average. Between the vulgar mistrust of vaccination, the timidity of statesmen about enforcing it, and the inadequacy of the measures taken to isolate the infection, there is reason enough to fear that the present epidemic, for which we may partly thank our neighbours over the water, has not yet nearly run its course. Up to the end of last month 4,000 persons had died in London during the present outbreak, and 47,000 escaped with injured health or sad disfigurement for life. Instead of separating sick from sound, not a little has been done to spread the disease by bringing large numbers of the sick together into one place in the midst of a crowded neighbourhood. Dr. Atchison's Indian experience has enabled him to point out the mischievousness of thus dealing with a scourge which ought rather to be treated on the opposite principle of perfect isolation and strict quarantine. Instead of spending hundreds of thousands in building large hospitals and asylums, and waiting for Mr. Bruce to mature a futile scheme for not enforcing vaccination, he would treat the sick at once as they are treated in India, by erecting "a few tents, wooden huts, or roomy sheds" on waste or open ground near the suburb attacked, and so securing to each patient the great advantages of fresh air, isolation, and prompt treatment. The same process should be carried out in every town and village in England, the best spots being near a river or the sea. Good use might also be made of floating hospitals. Anything, in short, he argues, would be better than brick or walled enclosures, which intensify the poison, and permanently damage the districts where they are placed. With plenty of fresh air, strengthening food, and cleanly nurture, the patient would have every chance of a quick recovery, while the danger of spreading the infection could be minimised by a careful quarantine. We are glad to find that Surgeon-Major Atchison's suggestions have already borne some good fruit at Stockwell and in many English towns.

THE Surgeon-major adds a warning word to those well-meaning but weak-minded people who would undo the good that has already been done in many places by the Contagious Diseases Act. He implores his "fairer readers" to consider "how much real injury they are doing to society, and to our future race, by the outcry they are either raising or encouraging against the extension of these most wholesome Acts." If they only knew "how much the health and beauty of their offspring depended upon untainted blood, they would raise a cry of thankfulness instead of abuse, and bless those who are manfully fighting for the purity and well-being of their homes." If the good people who raise so ignorant an outcry against these Acts could only bring themselves to hear reason and master plain facts, to believe that fighting against the spread of a fearful bodily disease has no more to do with the encouragement of vice or the toleration of immoral practices, than have any other sanitary precautions against the spread of any other disease, we might, with the Surgeon-major, hope soon to see a system which has already wrought so much good, both here and in India, extended to all the chief towns in this country. But, as the German poet has it,—

"Mit der Dummheit kämpfen Götter selbst vergebens."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

THE PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.

IN former numbers of this journal we have more than once pointed to the mischievous effects of hampering the Executive Engineer in India with the charge of minute accounts, such as any subordinate could more fitly look after in the regular course of his duties. We are glad to see that this is one of the very evils on which Colonel Tyrrell, for many years employed on the public works of Madras, Oudh, and the Central Provinces, lays the heaviest stress in his lately published essay on Indian public works.* His long and varied experience gives unpleasant force to his complaint of the way in which Executive Engineers are prevented, by "the misdirection and misemployment of their energies," from controlling malversations or exacting honest work. "The immense extent of some charges, the multitudinous description of operations to be carried out by one Executive Engineer, and the monthly accounts required in the minutest detail, practically preclude"—he says—"that honest and thorough supervision of the work in progress which was contemplated when the Department was organised." In other words, too much work, whether of the right or the wrong kind, is exacted from Public Works officers in the higher grades; and the natural result is work badly done at an extravagant outlay, or payments made to cheating underlings and their friends for work that had not even been begun.

What room there is for wholesale swindling under the present system may be guessed from one of Colonel Tyrrell's experiences in the Central Provinces. In overhauling the accounts for a road from Nagpore, he found by careful measurement that more than 3,600,000 cubic feet of earthwork on one section alone were returned as done and paid for, which "had never been done at all;" so that Government was swindled out of fifty or sixty thousand pounds for twelve miles only of road. But what sort of check can there be on fraudulent or reckless outlay when one Executive Officer has charge of a district equal to half of Ireland? Colonel Tyrrell himself had for nine years to look after a division of 16,000 square miles. The extent of his charge must in itself have seriously affected the thoroughness of his supervision, without the additional burden of a monthly report going into the smallest details of estimated and actual outlay. How is it possible for an Executive Engineer, with his hands overfull of more important work, to ensure the accuracy of the "details furnished for each culvert or job of whitewashing?" At a time when his proper business calls him elsewhere, he may be "confined to his office for days in trying to find out a correction of the Controller of Accounts for sixpence, to verify the number of bricks used in a drain, or to discover where a certain thousand of tiles went." The consequence is that the work of check and supervision is usually made over to "some Eurasian clerk, whose credit depends upon the number of formal errors he can detect, to the disgust of the most efficient and hard-working Executive Engineers." Such an arrangement of course utterly fails to check peculation, for nothing is easier than to draw up neat abstracts in which every item of outlay may be overstated, and to "trust to good luck, that there will be no personal inspection or inquiry on the spot."

* "Public Works and the Public Service in India." By Major Evans Bell and Lieutenant-colonel Fred. Tyrrell. Trubner and Co. 1871.

To add to the trials of the Executive Engineer, he has to carry out all sorts of petty repairs and minor works in cantonments, and is always liable to be "thwarted and badgered" by a Superintending Engineer whose theoretic knowledge may be balanced by utter ignorance of practical construction. For all that is done too or left undone he is held immediately responsible; but "what with keeping books and forms in order, under the constant worry of references and inquiries from Controllers of Accounts and Superintending Engineers, and often the total incompetency of officers above him to appreciate the actual means at his disposal, the special resources or deficiencies of his district, he may be so harassed with reports and official correspondence, so hampered by a lack of labour or material, that frequently no blame at all ought to be attached to him for any failure or delay." One fruitful source of annoyance has, we hope, been nearly dried up by the new plan of entrusting local governments with the chief management of their own public works. We mean the necessity of submitting all the details of every important work to a central office in Calcutta. The delays and mistakes thus caused are easy to imagine. Colonel Tyrrell gives a typical instance of the latter result. An Engineer in an outlying province had furnished to order two or three plans for a grand jail. None of them were accepted. "At last a lithographed plan and a blank estimate were furnished to him from the central office in Calcutta, and he was ordered to have a large drawing made according to the lithographed plan, and the estimate (the quantities for which had been taken out in Calcutta) filled in with the rates of his own District. This was done; the office in Calcutta however, forgetting that the plan was their own production, sent a tremendous wigging to the unfortunate Executive Engineer, because the arrangement of the buildings inside the jail was 'contrary to all precedent.'"

It is needless to dwell on the more prominent results of the present system, as displayed in the recent exposures at Allahabad, Poonah, Nusseerabad, and elsewhere. From all deliberate share in the waste and peculation which have turned Lord Dalhousie's great creation into a Department of ill, or at least ill-famed, Works, Colonel Tyrrell repeatedly absolves the superior officers of that department. He declares that, "as a class, no more honest, honourable, and hard-working public servants" are to be found, although the Department itself, as a whole, presents to practised and impartial eyes "a fearful spectacle of corruption and incapacity." The ultimate cause of such a state of things is ascribed, not to any moral or intellectual shortcomings of those in power, but to the notion that "among a people in such an inferior state of civilisation, clever amateurs of the dominant race must be quite competent to perform every public function." Among these "clever amateurs" he appears to include Sir R. Temple, who as Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces "never ceased to cavil at the small amount of work performed" in Colonel Tyrrell's district, complaining that enough money was not expended there, as if the extent of outlay determined the extent or quality of the work done. We fear that in this respect Sir R. Temple by no means stands alone. Another type of the clever amateur prevails, we are told, among the military engineers, who are sure to be good mathematicians, but "are not, as a rule, practically trained men." The Ganges Canal, of which Lord Dalhousie was so proud, and for which Sir Proby Cautley gained his knighthood, is once more cited as a lamentable monument of amateur engineering. It was designed, it seems, "in defiance of the first principles of hydraulics." Into the merits of that old controversy it is not for us to enter, but we have a strong impression that Sir Proby was not altogether worsted in his passage of arms with Sir Arthur Cotton. With regard to the Godavery Works on the other hand, Colonel Tyrrell has no doubt valid grounds for asserting that much time and money were wasted in blundering attempts to complete the work begun by the able engineer who planned the great anicut across the river.

Colonel Tyrrell's complaints of the incapacity and class pride displayed by the Royal Engineers in India may be as just as they are certainly bitter, but the question of their justice cannot be settled offhand. That great jealousy exists between the older and younger branches of the same service cannot be denied, any more than the tendency of the older branch to look down upon its rival of yesterday. It must however be remembered that charges of incapacity have been brought with equal loudness and stronger likelihood against the civil engineers also. It is more to the purpose to follow Colonel Tyrrell in his plans for remodelling the service to which he lately belonged. That the higher grades of that service should be thrown open to other than Royal Engineers, is a proposition which commends itself, in view of the steady growth of the civil element in the Public Works Department. There ought to be no monopoly of the best things in a department recruited from so many different sources. Fair play should be given not only to the civil members of the present body, but to native candidates for employment also. The great engineering talent of the natives speaks out through many an ancient building, tank, and canal, which all our boasted science fails to surpass. Colonel Tyrrell would next reduce the number of grades in the department, in order to define and fix responsibility. Instead of a twofold order of chief and superintending engineers, he would have only one authority between the Executive Engineer and the Government, namely, the Consulting Engineer, whose past experience should enable him to guide and oversee the work doing by the Executive Officers in his Circle, without reducing in any way their special responsibilities. This officer, who would be entirely responsible for the construction of all works sanctioned by the Government, "should tabulate and store up for the future all information of every sort likely to be useful," and should meet his executive engineers on a footing of perfect confidence and practical equality. To each of these superior Circles should be attached a Controller of Accounts, and the accounts themselves should be of the simplest description. Those kept by the Executive Engineer should be made up every half-year for the supervision of the Government. No large work should be even begun, until money enough for its completion or at least for its continuance to some given point could be placed at the disposal of the Executive Engineer. Here at any rate Colonel Tyrrell hits a huge blot in the present system. How much loss is yearly caused to the State by the sudden stoppage of works in progress, we dare not guess, but the yearly sum-total must amount to tens of thousands of pounds.

The Executive Engineer would be immediately responsible for the execution of any work already sanctioned in his district. For any laxness on his part the Consulting Engineer should call him to account, and if need were, he might be removed from his post. The Head of the Department might be aided by a Council of one Military and two Civil Engineers. By means of reforms like these an immense saving, both of time and money, could no doubt be assured, at a heavy discouragement to that organised corruption which has long caused the whole Department to stink in the public nostrils. Whether Colonel Tyrrell's proposals are the best that could be adopted, we do not care to decide; but certain it is that the Service, as it now exists, needs a good deal of reforming before it can ever answer as it should the real purpose of its creation.

CAMP OF EXERCISE.—It is intended to hold the Camp of Exercise at Delhi in November next. The number of troops to be present is estimated at 15,000.

THE PORT BLAIR CONVICTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—My attention has been drawn to a paragraph copied from your paper into the Times of the 6th inst., which contains some by no means flattering reflections upon those responsible for proper discipline amongst the convicts at the Andaman Islands.

The managers of the Times and of the Echo newspapers have, upon my request, at once made known to the public that Col. Barnett Ford, a late superintendent at Port Blair, and whose name, from an administration of several years, is identified with that settlement, ceased to occupy the post early in 1868, when ill-health obliged him to come to England.

As he carried with him the warm approbation of his superiors, Lord Napier and Sir Arthur Phayre, then Chief Commissioner of British Burmah, and as he is not now in this country, I trust to your sense of justice (you having originated the paragraph) to allow his brother to point out in your columns to all who might otherwise draw a mistaken conclusion from what has been printed, that the facts here mentioned conclusively show that these strictures on more recent events at the Andamans cannot apply to Colonel Ford.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Union Club, 12th June, 1871. GERARD FORD.

THE PATNA TRIALS.

The Indian Mirror holds that there is scarcely a well-wisher of the British rule in the country who will not deplore the judgment of the High Court in the matter of the application made for the transfer of Ameer Khan's case from Patna to Calcutta, which was refused on Thursday (11th). We have nothing to do with the legal accuracy of the decision, for even the admission of that will not convince the public that the share which rightly belongs to the Government in contributing to that result is consistent with the dignity and moderation which ought to characterise its movements. No one for a moment doubts that the strenuous opposition of the learned Advocate-General was directly prompted by the Supreme Government, which has thus taken upon itself the responsibility of inaugurating the trial with a step which at once places it at variance with public opinion. We are aware that the Government here is in a position, and seldom hesitates taking advantage of its position, to defy public opinion, and in a certain sense this may be occasionally a great convenience; but it is only a Government habitually regardful of and supported by public opinion which finds itself always strong, and capable of doing a great many things which absolutism would never dream of attempting. No one has any doubt of the thorough disposition on the part of the public of India, meaning thereby both the European community and those scattered sections of the native population which have begun taking an intelligent interest in public affairs—that the Government should have the means of getting at the root of this Wahabee business, and that unsparing and vigorous measures should be taken for stamping out a constantly recurring cause of suspicion and disloyalty in the midst of our peace and security. No sane man in the country but feels it a monstrous scandal that from our quiet and well-ordered occupations during a period of uninterrupted tranquillity and progress throughout the Empire, we should be startled by the repeated endeavours of hair-brained fanatics to promote sedition and rebellion against constituted authority. It has for years, ever since the Wahabee movement came to light, been the common sentiment throughout India that its authors and abettors should be unremittingly pursued to the bitter end. But there has also been the apprehension that the Wahabee affair, like the mutiny, might be perverted to purposes of selfish greed by men who knew too well how to wait upon Providence. An indefinable sense of something wrong has been abroad, a half-formed fear that capital was, in some quarter or another, being made out of the long-continued cry after traitors and rebels. Of course Government is not answerable if people choose to admit all sorts of foolish delusions into their heads. But the conduct of Government has not been absolutely immaculate from beginning to end. This man, Ameer Khan himself, has been kept nearly two years in confinement without legal warrant, at the mere will of the Governor-General, on the information of a policeman whose occupation would be gone if the Wahabee hunt was over. In addition to this, any undue anxiety to have the trial managed in a way supposed to be favourable to the conclusion desired by the Government, would enhance the distrustful feeling that Government was playing into hands which were adroit as well as unscrupulous. It is our duty to say that the opportunity has been missed of disabusing the public mind in a very serious matter, and that the neglect to do so will be sensibly made apparent in the appreciation that will be accorded to the verdict that may be obtained from the Patna Court.

COAL FOR RAILWAYS.

The Indian Daily News thinks there can be no doubt that the principal item in the working expenses of Indian Railways is the cost of fuel. The East Indian and Eastern Bengal Railways show a better balance sheet than the lines of the Madras and Bombay presidencies, not because they are managed more cheaply, but because they command cheaper fuel. At present mineral fuel is too dear, and wood too scarce, to permit of anything like uniformity of rates on the Indian lines. When, therefore, the head of the Government shows that extensive and costly lines, running through populous and fertile districts, fail to meet half the amount of the guaranteed interest on their capital, he discloses a state of things which every man in India has an interest in reforming. It is this fact, indeed, which lends such importance to Colonel Applegath's searches for coal in the Madras Presidency, and which has made the discoveries of mineral fuel in the Chanda valley a subject for national congratulation. This being so, the public would readily forgive the Government were it to push on with energy and vigour the researches which now fall to the lot of private individuals, or zealous officials on tour. Why cannot the Government cut itself far from red tape, and decide the question between the Geological Department and Colonel Applegath? Red tape requires that the inquiry should be entrusted to the Geological Department, but with all respect for red tape, we think precedent might, in such a case, be wisely and usefully set aside. The question has now dragged itself on for a length of time which would be impossible, considering the interest at stake, in any country save India, and, perhaps, office-ridden Russia. It is high time the Government did in many parts of Central India what it is doing in the Chanda Valley. In the spring of 1870 coal was found at Chanda, in the spring of 1871 at Wurrora. Next spring it will probably be found close to the railway, and in the course of a generation or so, the western limit of the coal series may be discovered by some enthusiastic official, whose geological tendencies have been quickened by a coal craze on the part of his superiors. Considering India pays £1,800,000 per annum for railway interest, with a prospect of paying more, she would bear with equanimity any reasonable expense for discovering the extent of her coal measures. Railways are to run through Central India west of the Chumbul, yet, although coal is known to exist in the Gwalior territories, no effort is made to ascertain the extent of the beds. Coal is found in Rewah, close to the Jubbulpore branch line; that is in a position which might have an important bearing on the working of the upper section of the East India line, and of the Jubbulpore extension of the G.I.P., yet no effort is made to work the fuel. Native princes are, as a rule, wise enough in all that concerns their own interests to know the value of coal mines, and would scarcely make difficulties if they found the Government were in earnest. With cheaper fuel we should have cheaper rates, and with cheaper rates an increase of traffic, and a larger contribution towards the sum due for interest on railway capital. The Government would do well to push its inquiries with more zeal and more heart. A year is far too long a time to be wasted in the exploration of one district. It is a proof, in fact, that the work is being done by an agency absurdly insufficient for the purpose, unless it is intended that the search for coal shall last as long as the Geological Survey, and be completed, just as some means of doing without mineral fuel shall have been adopted in Europe.

IS THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA TO SUPPORT SHERE ALI?

The Calcutta Examiner observes that speculation is starting up as to the course the Government of India will adopt should Yacoob Khan, as seems not unlikely, become master of Candahar, and consequently of the better portion of the dominions now ruled by his father, the Ameer. Will Government then open its purse-strings and send Shere Ali about one and a-half as much money as would bridge the Hoogly? If it fails to do so the Ameer will not fail to bear in mind that in his hour of need, when the very knowledge that he had received a subsidy from the British would have attached the wavering and venal sirdars to his cause, the only aid he received from his wealthy and powerful ally of the Umballa interview, was an expression of advice and good-will. On the other hand, if a large subsidy were sent, and the fact to transpire, it is not improbable that the taunt would be heard that that was all that had been gained by the abandonment of the policy of "masterly inactivity;" and it is further not at all certain that if the course of subsidising were once fairly entered on that subsidy would not have to follow subsidy for a period of years. Nevertheless, we do not hesitate to avow our conviction that Shere Ali ought to be assisted, and substantially; that is, if the "situation" in Afghanistan be really as is generally believed; for, be it remembered, there has been no official intelligence vouchsafed to the press of a date so late as that on which Yakoob Khan is represented according to one account, to have made himself master of Herat by force of arms; according to another, to have been welcomed into that city and proclaimed its ruler by the inhabitants without having had occasion to strike a blow. There is no doubt that the alliance with Shere Ali was and is of value to both England and India. When Prince Gortschakoff recently so unexpectedly re-opened the Black Sea question everybody felt it was well that such an alliance existed; and it is something more than a probability that were the Indian Government to lose all influence in Afghanistan, ten years would not have elapsed before the Russians would occupy in that country a position not dissimilar to that they now occupy in Bokhara. To prevent such a contingency would, we need hardly say, be worth both effort and expenditure; and therefore is it that we say that the Ameer ought now to have our substantial aid. Our troops he would not ask for; for to invite the British into Afganistan would be to marshal the whole population of the country against himself. Whatever Shere Ali and his immediate followers may think of us, we have not yet acquired either the confidence or the good will of the Afghan people. They have not forgotten the vengeance inflicted on them in 1842, and still intensely hate and dread the English. It may be, however, that Lord Mayo's Government has not in this matter waited for external urging; but has already, and in the nick of time, sent Shere Ali a portion of the superfluous cash balances. His Highness recently, even when he must have known that Yacoob Khan would soon be advancing on Herat, was unusually careful that kafilas and caravans, via the Kyber route, should not be molested by the tribes; and even went the length of systematically establishing posts along that wildest of roads. May it not have been that expecting a "remittance" from Peshawur, he had determined it should run no risk of falling into the hands of the tribes of the Pass, who, moreover, as has often happened before, may have been, by their friends at Peshawur, advised that a grand treasure would shortly pass their way on its road to Cabul?

EDUCATION OF INDIAN WOMEN.

The Madras Times remarks that the peculiar cleverness of natives is exactly what we should expect from the sons of native women. A native girl is an exceedingly sharp little creature, and there is abundant evidence to those who have watched natives attentively of the inherent cleverness of native women. They are quick at perceiving your meaning, deft and handy at anything they have to do, considering their very small practice, sharp at money matters, patient, hard-working and industrious. These are the very traits which one discovers in their sons, only largely developed by culture and habit. The native man is clever at figures and routine work, plodding and patient he is his mother all over, only the poor creature has not had her natural gifts exercised, and he has been given the opportunity of developing them fully. There is therefore nothing surprising in the fact of the peculiar cleverness of natives, but on the contrary it would be strange were they not what they are. It should be now our aim to develop the traits of female character which we have referred to, to the full, and by education to enlarge the minds, improve the sentiments, and do away with the prejudices, superstitions and follies of native women. This task once accomplished we may expect to see a very different race of men to that which now exists in India. Educated mothers would instil into their sons honourable feelings in childhood, direct their minds to elevated objects, and give their boys a proper respect and regard for the other sex instead of, as is the case now, bringing them up to think lightly of lying and deceit, to worship money and to look upon women as little better than beasts of burden. They would, in the natural course of things, as their own minds expanded and they began to see matters by the light of civilisation and knowledge, desire that their sons should do so likewise, and the consequence would be a greater assimilation of the native to the European as each generation passed away. In fact, it seems to us that the education of women will do more to really benefit the people of India than everything else in the way of instruction put together. It is useless cramming the youth of India with scholarship if you do not provide them with minds. A man may learn a great deal from books, but yet be a veritable ass. He may be able to give you historical facts but be utterly incapable of applying them; he may repeat poetry by the volume, yet be utterly unable to understand it or appreciate a single simile; he may jabber by the hour in grandiloquent language on politics, the art of government, or any other kindred subject, and yet at a pinch or in a difficulty be as helpless as an infant. What, then, is required is to give the natives of India minds capable of grasping grand ideas, flinging aside follies, and indulging in wide and liberal views and sentiments—and this can best be done by improving the reasoning faculties of their mothers. Just as in breeding animals if you desire to perpetuate some good trait, you carefully select time after time females in which that trait is conspicuous, so must you act with regard to men. You must educate the girls of this generation, and you will to a certainty by their means introduce girls into the world in the next generation, whose minds will be more capable of improvement than those of their mothers, and who being educated themselves will have sons superior in every way to their own brothers, and so on ad infinitum. The progress in expansion of mind from one generation to another may be small, but it will be sure, therefore every well wisher of India should by all means in his power help on the good work of introducing books and study into the zenana, and among native women generally, while Government and those who are entrusted with the task of educating the people will in our opinion be guilty of a positive crime if they do not further the movement in every possible way.

UNITED SERVICE INSTITUTION OF INDIA.

The first general meeting of this institution assembled on May 16, in Herr Von Goldstein's rooms at Benmore, Simla, for the purpose of electing a council and secretary, and for the passing of the rules of the institution.

This society has only recently come into existence. Its design, as detailed in the prospectus, is the discussion and publication of all questions of general professional interest; with a view to the promotion of naval and military art, science, and literature, and to get access to such experience of officers as, for want of some convenient channel of communication, has hitherto been lost. In order fully to carry out this object, a journal is to be published in connection with the institution, to which members and others will be invited to contribute.

The meeting was numerously attended, and was presided over by H.E. the Commander-in-Chief.

His lordship, in opening the business of the evening, addressed the committee as following:—

"Gentlemen,—The establishment of this institution supplies a want which has been very much felt in India. I heartily congratulate Col. MacGregor on the success which has so far attended his very spirited and praiseworthy effort to effect an object that will afford occupation and encouragement to many of our brother officers and members of the services and community, information to others, and will tend greatly to the benefit of the services at large, and, through them, to the Government which they serve and maintain.

"It has not been from lack of materials that such an institution has not heretofore obtained a permanent existence. I believe there is no service in the world which contains more talent or more varied opportunities of gaining knowledge and experience than that of her Majesty's armies in India. The officers of her Majesty's British regiments bring contributions from every clime and country that is under the rule of Great Britain. In India men isolated and severed from the means and appliances of the stored knowledge of Europe have opened for themselves new trains of thought, have invented ways of attaining the objects and results which they desired, and have gained mental power and originality in the exercise.

"We have representatives of the service in every kind of administration and employment. In the telegraph, railways, and political employ; in education; in dealing with every variety of wild tribes; in every clime and country. We have sent one officer to England to put the Mint in order, and another to administer the engineering departments of her Majesty's dockyards, and we have also sent some good governors of colonies out of India. It is impossible that service so employed should fail in an abundant supply of facts, knowledge, and experience, which may be usefully recorded and preserved in the pages of this journal. Efforts have been made from time to time to effect this desirable object, but the distances, the slow postal communication, and the extension of our possessions and stations as we advanced over the continent of India have been against it.

"One very valuable journal, called the Military Repository, edited by a Major Parlby, had, many years ago, a short existence, but it showed how a subaltern of artillery at Dum-Dum invented a rival to the Congreve Rocket, and how a Colonel Pearse, of the Bengal Artillery, marched a field force through the hostile states of the then little known continent of India to assist Sir Eyre Coote in the Deccan. I hope that some opportunity may be found of recovering that journal for the library of this institute.

"The Calcutta Review, though mainly occupied with miscellaneous and general subjects, has given us valuable articles on the army, some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims. The professional paper on Indian engineering published at Roorkee is admirably conducted by Colonel Medley, but is occupied with engineering subjects. We require a journal devoted more especially to the discussion of, and mutual instruction in, the tactics and strategy of the warfare of the day. We are now arrived at a period of great changes in the art of war, and we require every information that can assist us in meeting the demands of the time. Independent of, and separate from, that consideration, we have the change in the material of the army, in accordance with the advance of the class of people from whom it springs, and we require to modulate our administration of that material to keep pace with the civilisation of the day. The youngest officer in the army has an important trust in the training of the men entrusted to his care, who may be greatly affected for good or ill by the teaching and example that he may give them. Still more the senior officers have a greater and more important trust in the instruction and education of the officers junior to them.

"Many a valuable lesson in these duties may be learnt from the journal of a well-conducted institution such as we hope that this may be. Much valuable information may be preserved in its pages which now passes away with the daily press, and there are very few subjects which will not be benefited by temperate and well-regulated discussion.

"In the subordinate ranks of the army there is an amount of ability and acquirements which would surprise those who have never sought it, and I am very glad to learn from the proposals which have been put forward, that it is intended to admit non-commissioned officers and soldiers to contribute to the journal, and to attend the lectures of the institution.

"It is to be regretted that circumstances do not admit of a more central place for the meetings of the institution, but while perhaps there may be some objections to Simla, there were few places where a large number of officers are brought together.

"It will, I hope, be quite practicable to hold meetings of the institution wherever a large assembling of officers may take place, either at the Presidency or at camps of exercise. I trust that the pages of the journal will be ever kept free from all party or sectional bias, and that officers and soldiers will freely use them for the discussion of subjects in which they believe they can give useful information.

"With my very best wishes for the success of the institute, and my obligations, as head of the army, to Colonel Maegregor for the praiseworthy efforts he has made to establish the institution, I commend it to the support of the army of India."

The election of a council and secretary was then proceeded with, after which the rules of the institution were considered, and, with some few amendments, passed by the committee.

At the close of the proceedings a vote of thanks was passed to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief by Major-General Norman for the admirable way in which his Lordship conducted the business of the committee.—Englishman.

STATION TALK.

SIMLA, May 13.—Last evening the plaintive notes of the "Dead March" attracted my attention, and I found that the funeral procession of Lieutenant General Innes, one of Simla's most esteemed inhabitants, was passing. The General, I find, met his death by injuries caused by a fall down a place some fifteen or sixteen feet deep; a sort of platform raised on which stands his house, "Hugh's Dell," the one in which he resided. He was, it seems, attending to some of his botanical specimens, he being very fond of plants, and stepped back a little too far, and was precipitated over the edge of the platform, which was not protected in any way, not even by a railing. The Volunteer Corps, of which he was the Colonel Commandant, formed the firing party; almost the whole corps turned out to do a last honour to the earthly remains of their much-esteemed colonel; and very sad and solemn the procession appeared moving at a very slow pace, the doleful strains of the "Dead March" played by the Governor-General's band, reverberating among the hills. The body was consigned to the grave at about six o'clock; the Rev. Mr. Crofton, our new clergyman, reading the burial service. The ceremony closed with three rounds fired by the firing party. The streets were thronged with spectators; indeed I had no idea Simla contained such a number of inhabitants; all the roads commanding even a distant view of the route taken by the funeral procession was lined three or four deep. We are having most unusual weather just now; clouds and rain, with an occasional shower of hail, visit us almost every day. The atmosphere is in consequence rather chilly at times. It has been blowing rather hard, too.

BAREILLY, May 15.—Mr. Hearne has been released on bail by the Judge, but his case is still pending. I am not in a position to say whether the sentence passed by the magistrate will be cancelled or confirmed by Mr. Vansittart. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor will be here, as I understand, on the 19th instant, and also Mr. Inglis, who never fails to be present on any occasion when his Honour is pleased to visit us. On the night of the 9th instant we had a very heavy shower, and the weather in consequence became cool, but for two days there has been a sudden change, and it is now very hot. Dust-storms are common things, as we get them daily. I am not weatherwise, yet I fancy there will be rain shortly.

LANDOUR, May 14.—A great shower of hailstones fell on the 6th; heavy rain, thunder and lightning on the 9th, 11th, 12th, 13th, and 14th. The road railings are very shaky, and require to be repaired. Accidents have occurred, and deaths, both in cantonment and at Mussoorie, have happened through people trusting to their security. The horizontal bullees that are just put in will not remedy the evil. The piles and the foundation generally give way, and they require replacing and repairing. General Travers and party are hunting up tigers in the Dhoon. I have not heard of their success. They must have rather wet weather, which will, I fear, spoil their sport.

MEERUT, May 15.—The frequent dust-storms and rain so universal of late is the cause of our mild weather at present, and the continued easterly wind portends another storm. The exodus to the mountains has only just commenced, and the portly manager of the Amalgamated Dak Company is looking cheerful at the harvest in store, whose motto is "make hay while the sun shines," no matter what the vituperation or thanks of the public may be. Several clerks and others attached to the secretariat N. W. P. are daily passing through this for Nynee Tal, and complain bitterly of the exorbitant rates brought about by Mr. G—'s amalgamated scheme, which compels the majority to proceed by canal shigram. I regret to record the demise last night at Gee's hotel of Lieutenant K. M. E. Kerr, of the 96th Regiment from Dinapoor, who was ordered to Mussoorie by the doctors on account of diseased liver; he was certainly accompanied by a European soldier, but want of nourishment and rest caused entire prostration, and he arrived at the hotel just in time to expire in strong convulsions. I had occasion lately to go to see the "Asylum for the Poor," for which place handsome donations are made by the public, and I must say I was sadly disappointed with its state. The man in charge with his buxom companion occupy the pucka kothee, and apparently drive a trade in rabbits and poultry. Our worthy deputy-collector (of income-tax notoriety), who is charge d'affaire, with an inherent dread of leprosy, drives as far as the gate once or so during the season, cosily seated in his buggy, inquires about the inmates (probably the ducks), takes a distant panoramic view, and for fear of infection drives home in haste; no wonder that the distressed Christians are so importunate when ordered to the "poor-house." I hope this may meet the eye of our worthy chaplain, and that he will also lecture a certain class of his congregation who profane the Sabbath by not only witnessing but dire ting an arena of savages displaying their gymnastics in violation of the most sacred Christian principles.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE GARROW HILLS.—The Hindoo Patriot warns the Government that "a cloud is gathering on the Garrow Hills." A chuprassie belonging to the Topographical Survey came upon a drinking party of Garrow men and attempted to take a sword away from one of them. The hill-men seized the chuprassie, bound his hands and feet, and then chopped off his head.

NATIVE LOYALTY.—The Lucknow Times, referring to the infamous article in Reynolds' Miscellany relative to the death of the infant son of the Prince of Wales, says that "no Hindoostanee would subscribe to such a diabolical paper." "If the people of England," it continues, "bear no love towards our revered Queen, we entreat her to abandon England and come and reside in India, enthroned in the hearts of her Hindoostanee subjects."

A PLEA FOR NATIVE INNS IN CALCUTTA.—The necessity of inns or caravanserais for the accommodation of native travellers in Calcutta is commented upon by the Akbar-i-Alam. The writer states that it is surprising that a rich place like the City of Palaces should not have a single inn for native travellers, and complains that the wealthy inhabitants of the city spend large sums of money in constructing tanks and temples, while they will not contribute to building caravanserais.

THE "WAHABEE" CASE.—The Englishman understands that Mr. O'Kinealy is to conduct the trials at Patna without the assistance of any barrister, and it can only presume that "the reason why this course has been pursued is that the Government has such a thorough belief in its action in the matter that it can afford to trust the issue to the ordinary procedure of the Court trying the case. It is not unnatural that it should be anxious to avoid even the appearance of too zealous prosecution." The Calcutta Examiner says:—"It is now admitted that there is no chance of the great cross-examiner, Serjeant Ballantyne, taking part in the proceedings (at Patna), and we regret having been instrumental to the circulation of the report that that learned gentleman was coming out. We had every reason to deem the information we received on the subject thoroughly reliable, and though it turns out not to have been so, we take no blame."

PUNJAB UNIVERSITY.—The arrogance of the Calcutta University finds a fitting answer in the flourishing state of the Punjab College, and the enthusiasm with which the scheme has been not only received but supported by the people of the province. Better evidence could hardly be found of the spurious character of the education we have succeeded in diffusing in Bengal than the unwillingness of the country to pay for it. Since the 1st January, 1870, the Endowment Fund of the Punjab College has increased from Rs. 89,035 to Rs. 3,02,000, and the income from all sources has risen from Rs. 22,680 to Rs. 42,220. Yet this is a country which has only lately escaped from the devastating influence of native rule, which has not a permanent settlement, and whose people have hitherto been more addicted to war than to the study of science and languages. Our contemporary gives a long list of fellowships and scholarships which native munificence has enabled the College to offer the students; and the day seems to be not far distant when this local institution will rival the omnivorous C. U. in the magnitude of its operations. That in their success it will contrast favourably with it we have not a shadow of doubt.—Englishman.

ALLAHABAD.—Colonel Fraser, C.B., our new Chief Engineer, seems to have been very popular in British Burmah. The few days preceding his departure were one long ovation, and even now that he has gone the papers are full of his praises. If only for the lighthouses he built, and especially that triumph of engineering on the Alguada Reef, Colonel Fraser deserves the eulogies he has received. —Pioneer.

THE EX-NAWAB OF OUDH.—With reference to the claim against the Government by the ex-Nawab of Oudh of between thirty or forty lakhs of rupees, the Lawrence Gazette remarks that the ex-Nawab has allowed a period of sixteen years to elapse without bringing forward any claim, and expresses its opinion that if the Government were to extend to the nobility the rules of limitation barring a civil action, it would no longer be troubled with questions of this kind.

DEATH OF LIEUTENANT KERR.—The Meerut correspondent of the Delhi Gazette records the demise, on the night of the 14th inst., at Gee's Hotel, of Lieutenant K. M. E. Kerr, of the 96th Regiment, from Dinapore, who had been ordered to Mussoorie by the doctors on account of diseased liver. "He was certainly accompanied by a European soldier, but want of nourishment and rest caused entire prostration, and he arrived at the hotel just in time to expire in strong convulsions."

ATTACK BY PRISONERS ON CAPTAIN CADELL, V.C.—We are sorry to learn from the Agra paper of a murderous attack upon Captain Cadell, V.C., the Political Agent at Ulwar, by certain of the prisoners in the jail there. A body of imprisoned Thakoors attacked him, and maltreated him as much as they could maltreat a gentleman not in the habit of submitting to much of that sort of thing. All the guard that accompanied him but two men and the jailor, of course, vanished. In a little time the disturbance was quelled, and the triangles and the cat were in much requisition for some time after. The gallant officer is not much the worse for the treatment he experienced, but the Thakoors are.

THE MEDICAL SERVICE.—The Indian Mirror hears it is the intention of the Home Government to abolish the Indian Medical Service as a separate field of professional employment, and to amalgamate it with the British Medical Service in general. "This well-conceived medical arrangement," remarks that paper, "will obviate one invidious duty, that of necessarily admitting successful native candidates to the Covenanted Medical Service of this country. For if Indians will still persevere to compete in the periodical examinations and happen to pass, they will have as much chance of being appointed in India as in Canada or the Victorian Islands, as in all probability will be posted in the latter places. This is a nice prospect for our ambitious young medicos."

CHARGE OF COWARDICE BEFORE THE LOSHAIS.—It is reported that the men of the 4th Regiment Native Infantry, lately tried for cowardice before the enemy, have been acquitted. The Indian Daily News thinks "it is to be regretted that the president of the court-martial was not an officer of a British corps. The desire to see ourselves as others see us is greatly facilitated by deputing the duty to others. The Englishmen present with the sepoys of the 4th Regiment Native Infantry swore that those soldiers fled the moment the enemy turned upon them, but the Court ruled that there was no evidence to prove that the subadar did not use a wise discretion in permitting the retreat. Probably not. Evidence to establish the necessity of courage is always difficult to obtain. The Englishmen, being police officers only, could not, of course, be supposed to know all the efficacy of a retrograde movement." According to the Indian Mirror the Court decided that the alleged "cowardice" was "a simple case of retreat, and the subadar in command wisely used his discretion in ordering it.

"THE CHEESE."—Under the title of "The Cheese," the last number of All the Year Round discusses the origin of a well-known modern popular phrase used to designate anything particularly adapted to the test of those employing it. The conclusion arrived at by the writer is in favour of the view which refers the expression to a Hindustani parentage. That philology should dispense with the aid of history is only excusable when there is no history to help it. In the present case it has no such excuse. No doubt the expressions "that's the cheese" and "that's the thing" are nearly synonymous; and no doubt chiz, or cheez, is the Hindustani for thing. A coincidence of this kind is, however, very poor proof; and in the present case it is not the best proof. That Anglo-Indians should have introduced this piece of slang into their mother-tongue would be much less improbable if they had ever been in the habit of using the Hindustani word chiz in the same way in India. But there is no evidence whatever that they were in the habit of expressing their approval of a thing by calling it "the chiz" before "the cheese" became current slang in the mother-country. Indeed, the combination would, it strikes us, be quite contrary to the genius of Anglo-Indian slang. We fear, therefore, that the additional dignity which the writer in All the Year Round claims for the phrase on the ground of an Indian origin must be abandoned.—Englishman.

GENERAL BALFOUR ON THE GOVERNMENT ESTIMATES. — General Balfour is not so very far wrong. But then he writes in ignorance of many facts. It is true that there have been reductions in the strength of the British and native armies serving in India. It is no less true that a transport service has been created which costs India, as a current charge, over £100 for every soldier moved between country and country, and well-nigh £200 of the prime cost of the transport vessels is imported into the account. The job is an Imperial job, in the interest of her Majesty's Navy; and the Government of India has not, so far as we know, had the courage to oppose it. It is also true that the charge of the maintenance of the Staff Corps is little short of double what it was when General Balfour was in India. A higher physique and discipline in the native army has rendered unavoidable a larger invaliding, with corresponding increase of establishment and expenditure. In the three items mentioned General Balfour will find a considerable part of the missing two millions sterling. We consider that his estimate of three millions sterling, as representing the reduction which should have been effected in the military expenditure of India, between 1862 and 1871, as excessive. That large reductions have been carried out is established by the fact that the sums economised now go to meet charges which had no existence in General Balfour's day. We do not defend the new charges.—Indian Daily News.

THE INDIAN ARTILLERY.—The following regarding the Indian Artillery has reached the Pioneer by the English mail "from a generally well-informed source":—"The field officers to be employed with the reserve forces have been selected with a view to their special fitness, and are all from the old list. The field officers of the reduced Indian brigades could not be employed, being actually in India. The committee (Captain Vivian's) was assembled to devise some means of removing the block in the old list, and had no instructions to go into the question of promotion in the three separate Indian lists, the terms and conditions of retirement of officers on those lists being governed by the Government of India. The stoppage of promotion caused by the reduction of E Brigade R.H.A. and 25th Brigade R.A. will not be wholly borne by the Bombay and Bengal lists, the old list having already absorbed three lieutenant-colonels, eight captains, and five second captains. The promotion in the old list consequent on the above will be Colonel Ady, now eighth for promotion to major-general; Lieutenant-Colonel Henry, now eighth for promotion to regimental colonel; Captain Bolton, now eighteenth for promotion to lieutenant-colonel; second Captain Knox, now twenty-eighth for promotion to captain; Lieutenant Noyes, now twenty-eighth for promotion to second captain. The block will be still further reduced by the late grant of £5,000 for this purpose. There is no intention to aid the old Indian lists in improving their promotion. Thus they are utterly ruined unless the Indian Government come to their rescue. No time this mail to draw comparisons, but we in England are savage at the suppression which this promotion in the old lists must subject the Indian lists to. Will send comparative statement as soon as all these promotions are gazetted."

HOW EARTHQUAKES IN INDIA ARE MANAGED.—In India earthquakes endeavour to fulfil the journalistic function which monster gooseberries so meritoriously discharge at home. As the rising of Parliament is the signal for the appearance of abnormal vegetables in the English papers, so we have always found the long dull months of the hot weather the most prolific of subterraneous disturbances here. Before many weeks are over, we look forward with well-grounded hopes to our usual summer crop of earthquake-correspondents, and meanwhile we commend to the notice of these accurate and friendly observers the following explanation of their favourite phenomenon. It is the Hindu theory of earthquakes, which, though doubtless well known to many, may be new to some of our readers, and of which we are reminded by coming across it in Mr. Westland's recently-published report on Jessore. It appears then, that the world is supported on the head of a serpent, who in his turn rests upon a tortoise. Now, this serpent has many heads—a thousand at least—and after a little time he naturally begins to have a headache in the one which supports the world. He relieves himself by transferring the weight from the sore head to the next one, and it is the motion of this transference which causes the earthquake. It is not, however, the material weight of the earth that wearies the serpent, but it is the weight of the sin on it. In the good days of old it took a long time—twelve years and more—to run up the amount of sin necessary to produce a headache. But in these degenerate days a year or two suffices, and earthquakes are hence of more frequent occurrence than they were of old. When the sceptical Englishman asked, if the serpent rested on the tortoise, on what did the tortoise rest, he was told that it rested on nothing. Thereupon he objected that the agency of the tortoise and the serpent seemed to him somewhat superfluous, since if the tortoise could rest on nothing, the earth might equally rest upon nothing. But his interlocutor the little Brahman boy's philosophy was deeper than that it should fail before so obvious an argument, and the English caviller was told that the earth being material could not rest on nothing, but the tortoise being an avator or incarnation of Vishnu stood in need of no support. The unbeliever's objections were silenced, and he accepted the revelation.—Englishman.

MILITARY.—We (Pioneer) understand that the question of an augmentation to the corps of Royal Engineers is again thrown into abeyance. The War Department a few months ago agreed to the proposal of the Indian authorities to add two additional battalions for Indian service. This amount was shortly afterwards reduced to one battalion, and now the Secretary of State for War finds himself unable to come to any conclusion in the matter pending the general question of the re-organisation of the British Army. The truth is, utter chaos obtains at present at the War Office, which appears simply unable to do anything but suspend action upon every matter coming before it, and the Royal Engineers must now share the state of incertitude as to their future which obtains in all other branches of the army. Meanwhile, however, a large number of supernumerary second captains and subalterns have been appointed in anticipation of the proposed augmentation—a state of things which does not intend to obviate the stagnation in promotion from which that gallant corps is already suffering.—The Pioneer hears on good authority that on the approaching abolition of the 25th Brigade Royal Artillery, and the reduction of field brigades to six batteries each, the following arrangements will be made:—1-25th R.A. will become 7-24th R.A.; 2, 3, 4-25th R.A. will be broken up, and the officers and men absorbed; 5-25th R.A. will become 2-22nd R.A.; B-22nd R.A. will become E-23rd R.A.; G-19th will become F-23rd R.A.; G-16th R.A. will become F-20th R.A.; 5-23rd R.A. will be broken up, and the officers and men absorbed. From this our contemporary gathers that the system of selection recommended by Mr. Cardwell has already been introduced into India; as on no other grounds can it suppose that the 5-25th R.A., after having already passed three years in a hill-station, should be sent home out of its turn, and a senior battery to it (1-25th R. A.) left out here. "The injustice of sending the senior battery to be junior in a junior brigade, and the junior battery to be one of the seniors in a senior brigade, is self-evident." The same paper mentions the fact that the 1-25th (which is to be treated as the junior battery) was formed in the year 1786, and the 5-25th, which is to go home over the head of its elder brother, was not in existence before 1863. —Her Majesty's 11th N.I., at present stationed at Dum Dum, have received orders to be in readiness to proceed to Barrackpore, for which station they will leave in about a week. They will be relieved at Dum-Dum by the companies of the 22nd Pubjab N.I. at present in Fort William.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, May 24.—The events of the past week have been very discouraging, and the numerous failures which have occurred in the bazaar have tended to put an almost complete stop to business. It is reported that many more of the dealers are in difficulties, and fresh failures are expected. Under these circumstances, the tone of the market is anything but cheerful, and confidence between buyers and sellers is at an end. In values there is little change to note, except as regards SHIRTINGS, which have had rather a weakening tendency. The TWIST market has been quiet during the best part of the week, but there is a slightly better inquiry for 40's at closing. COLOURED TWIST continues very dull.

GENERAL HAINES.—H. E. General Haines (who, we observe, has been made a Knight Commander of the Bath) arrived at Madras on Sunday, May 21, to assume command of the army of that presidency. He was received at the station by Major-General Shubrick, who has acted temporarily as Commander-in-Chief, and numerous other officers.

COOLIE EMIGRANTS.—Coolie emigrants, in spite of all the protection given to them, seem to be still unprotected. Some who lately returned to Madras from Port Natal have complained of the treatment they received abroad and of serious infringements of their contract. The Madras Government have taken the matter up.—Pioneer.

MEDICAL AID IN RAILWAYS.—The subject of medical aid for travellers suddenly attacked by cholera on railway journeys has come up for consideration in connection with a case which occurred on the South-West line of railway at Coimbatore, and the Sanitary Commissioner in a letter to the Chief Secretary solicits the order of Government on the subject. With the view of providing for the difficulty the Commissioner suggests that, at each station where a railway apothecary resides, a simple hut or shed should be kept for the purpose of housing anyone attacked by cholera or other sudden illness, and that it should be a recognised duty of the railway apothecaries to afford all necessary aid in such cases. As cases of cholera require constant watching and attendance, as well as suitable food and drink, the railway apothecaries should be allowed to provide, without delay, all absolute necessaries, reporting the same to the civil surgeon and collector of the district, and the latter might be authorised to disburse whatever trifling charges had been incurred by the apothecary in the treatment of the case. Provision has already been made for the disbursement by collectors of expenses incurred on account of pauper travellers admitted into civil dispensaries, and probably the funds available for this purpose would be sufficient to meet any small charges incurred on account of railway travellers. The Government of Madras directs that the letter be communicated through the consulting engineer for railways to the managers of the railways in the Presidency, with a view to the suggestion of the Sanitary Commissioner being carried into effect.—Friend of India.

LORD NAPIER'S LECTURE.—Lord Napier on the evening of May 18 delivered a lecture in the Evangelistic Hall on Painting in India. Sir Colley H. Scotland presided, and there was a very large attendance on the occasion, the leading members of the European and native communities being present. There was also a good attendance of ladies. The proceedings of the evening were begun with a short prayer by the Rev. J. Gorton, after which Lord Napier proceeded to deliver his lecture. The language used by the noble lecturer was most eloquent, and the subject was very ably treated. After alluding to the position of the art in Europe and to the influence it had exercised on religious and civil life, his lordship considered what painting has been and is in India. He drew attention to the religious and historical paintings of the Buddhists and to the degradation of the art of painting in India after the time of the Buddhists. The art, he observed, had been practised in a most mechanical spirit. The lecturer touched upon the different forms of painting that had been practised in India, and expressed his conviction that little had been done. He, however, had hopes that the art would yet be practised with success by the natives of this country. His Lordship then discussed the questions as to how the art was to be introduced into India, and how it was to be practised by the natives of this country. After a few observations as to how the art might be introduced into India, his Lordship dwelt at length on the subjects from which the artist could choose to practise. India, he thought, was not wanting in resources for the art. At the conclusion of the lecture Sir Colley Scotland acknowledged the honour and pleasure Lord Napier had conferred on himself (the Chairman) and the meeting by delivering so able and eloquent an address. Sir Colley added that the lecture was fully appreciated. The subject was treated with sparkling eloquence and great ability, and all who had listened to the lecture could not but have experienced the greatest delight. As an essay also the lecture would be found a valuable production. Dr. Jesuasdasen Pillai thanked Lord Napier for his lecture and for the interest he took in the society, and the chairman for having presided.

COTTON.

The latest circular of the Mofussil Company, Limited, contains the following information regarding the weather and the crops, received from the cotton districts :—

"DHOLLERAH, May 22.—During the early part of the week we had heavy rain, but the weather is now fine again. Arrivals for the past week amounted in all to about 500 candies. The cotton was in most cases very damp, and must have had a considerable quantity of black leaf; it was, however, eagerly bought up.

"BROACH, May 24.—The wet stormy weather of last week has been succeeded by bright warm days, but clouds still gather in the evening. Transactions have been of the most trifling nature, the few holders of good cotton being generally disinclined to realise. I do not think we shall receive very much more cotton this season; the late rise in England having had the effect of keeping back the little balance of kupas now remaining in the districts. I quote machine at Rs. 198 to Rs. 199.

"RANDERE.—A few showers have fallen at intervals during the week. The roads being again open, rather more animation is observable in business, and ginning is still being actively carried on. Our agent reports that there is now but little cotton to come forward, even adulterated churka, and a mixture of churka and machine sold as machine, having been cleared away.

WURDAH, May 24.—Our arrivals during the week amount to about 100 candies; 1,000 bojahs are yet expected to come forward before the rains commence, but as they are in the hands of patels and petty dealers, the greater part might be kept back if they cannot get buyers at the rates they ask.

OOMRAWUTTEE, May 24.—Supplies are falling off, and this, combined with lots of natives being in the market offering for everything, has put rates up considerably. Best selling at equal to Rs. 185, and inferior only a rupee or two less. No appearance of rain yet.

"KHANGAUM, May 24.—As anticipated in my last report supplies to the market have increased by 300 candies during the week, 1,500 candies in all having been received. As most of this cotton belonged to Marwaree dealers who could afford to hold it, and were doing so, it is evident the excessively high prices lately ruling here have brought it forward, and that if they continue, which appears most probable, since the interruption of the supplies from Dhollerah and Broach has diverted many orders this way, we shall doubtless have considerable markets until the rain falls. The weather is again as hot as before; the late clouds have entirely disappeared.

"SHEAGAUM, May 24.—We have again clear and dry hot weather without any appearance of rain hanging about. Small supplies still continue to come into this market; the only total for the week a little over sixty candies. Native buyers are leaving for Bombay now, and I daresay in another week arrivals to this market will cease. Field labour is progressing rapidly."

Miscellaneous.

A COMMON LANGUAGE FOR INDIA.—A gentleman, presumably residing in Surat, recommends the formation of a universal language for all India. A common language for the whole population of a country, is, indeed, necessary to foster feelings of patriotism and nationality. In fact, no thoughts and ideas can be exchanged by a whole nation without such a lingua franca. But we doubt very much if Hindoostanee will be the fit medium for this purpose.—Indian Mirror, May 16.

MUSCAT.—"A new feature of disquietude has," says the Friend of India, "been imported into the affairs of Muscat—the Turks, it is said, have reasserted their old claims to Bahrein, Muscat, &c., and with our conflicting authority of Foreign-office, India-office, and Government of India, we are far from as ready to move as we ought to be in an emergency. There is little doubt, however, that a prompt step will be at once taken if any interference is attempted. Syud Toorkee at present is master of the position."

SUPPOSED LOSS OF A SHIP FROM BOMBAY.—The ship Cromwell, Captain Rohlsen, which arrived in the harbour yesterday afternoon, brings a report which would seem to point to the loss of a ship laden with cotton from Bombay. On the 25th inst., when in lat. 15° N., long. 67° E., the Cromwell passed a piece of wreck, apparently the side of a ship, painted black, coppered, without ports. Two days previously the captain had seen two bales of cotton floating about, which are described as bearing native marks; and on the same day as the wreck was seen two packages were observed in the water. They were covered with matting, but no marks could be distinguished. The Cromwell being under way, and the wreck passing at a good speed, it was impossible to secure it or look for any marks upon it, though it was close alongside.—Bombay Gazette, May 27.

HINDOO WIDOWS.—The Indian Mirror (organ of the Brahmo Somaj) writes :—"The Bombay Guardian perhaps is not aware that there is great difference between Hindoo society in Bombay and Bengal. In Bengal a widow's head is not shaved. Far from being reduced to 'a menial, or regarded as an outcast,' her principal duty is to take the most prominent part, next to the Brahmin, in all the religious ceremonies of the Hindoo home. She is allowed greater liberty and authority, especially when she is of an elderly age, than anybody else in the family. Everybody eats and drinks what she touches or cooks, but the food, like that of a Brahmin, is defiled by another's touch. In times of sickness or misfortune, all members of the family look up to her, and expect from her the help which she almost instinctively renders. As a mother, as a sister, as an aunt, she is of the greatest possible use to the household. She is certainly considered unfortunate, but her misfortune gives her the character of sacredness. It is for this reason we maintain that a widowed Hindoo lady, unless she be widowed in very early age, does not, except in exceptional cases, require to be remarried."

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, May 27.—More business has been done this week than in the preceding one, but the transactions are still on a most limited scale. Prices, however, are quite unchanged, in consequence of stocks generally being light. GREY GOODS continue dull, but prices generally are unchanged. Madapollams are steady, with some inquiry. Long Cloths were taken off at 9 annas per lb. Jaconets are scarce, and in good request, and considerable sales, principally "to arrive," have taken place. BLEACHED GOODS show no change in prices. DYED and PRINTED GOODS continue very dull, and in some descriptions prices are lower. TURKEY RED GOODS continue dull; Plain Cambrics 25-inch 28 yards, Rs. 4-12½ to 5; Dimities, Rs. 4-12. YARNS are steadily inquired for, and an advance of ¼ anna is now obtainable in several numbers. In Turkey Red there has been a strong inquiry, and prices have advanced ¼ to 1 anna upon last week's quotations. METALS: In Copper Braziers a slight improvement in price has taken place. In Iron, Nail Rods, square, have also improved. In other descriptions no transactions reported. COAL continues in the same dull state.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, May 27.—COTTON: Following the course of Liverpool, the market here, in the earlier part of the week, drooped Rs. 2 to 3 per candy, but latterly it has become very strong, and on receipt of the telegrams of the 26th an advance of Rs. 7 to 10 per candy took place. The business, for export, however, done in Bombay during the week is much smaller than we have had to report for some weeks back, the purchases aggregating about 14,000 bales only. The market closes with an advancing tendency. Below we append our quotations, viz.:—

SCINDE, PUNJAB, AND DELHI RAILWAY.—The report of the directors states that the gross traffic receipts for the half-year ending the 31st of December last amounted to £244,889, of which the passenger traffic contributed £87,659, and the goods traffic £157,230. The working expenses absorbed £198,943, or 81·23 per cent. of the gross receipts, leaving a net revenue of £45,946, or 18·77 per cent. The traffic as compared with the corresponding half of 1869 showed an increase in the passenger traffic of £22,932, and in the goods traffic of £40,158. The gross receipts showed an increase of £63,090, and the net revenue an increase of £24,673. Those results were partly due to increased mileage. The opening of the Sutlej Bridge was too late to influence the results of the past half-year's working to any great extent; but now that the whole of the company's system had been placed in direct connection with the East Indian Railway, and unbroken railway communication had been established between Lahore and Mooltan and Delhi, Calcutta, and Bombay, an addition to the traffic might be looked for. The number of passengers conveyed by the company during the past half-year was 903,400, as compared with 732,610 in the same half of 1869. Of the total number carried 900,298 travelled by railway, and 3,102 by the vessels of the flotilla. The traffic was conducted without accident to any passenger. The receipts on capital account to the 31st of December last amounted to £10,287,654, and the balance unexpended to £253,798.

BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.—The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Friday, at the London Tavern; Lieutenant-Colonel P. T. French, the chairman, presided. The report was taken as read. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said that the past half-year was the inferior one for traffic in India. They had to compare with a half-year in which numerous earth trains were run, and also in which 30,000 tons of grain were carried over the line in consequence of a famine, but he was glad to say that the famine no longer existed. The fares for third-class passengers had been reduced from 4 pies to 3 pies per mile, or 25 per cent., which caused an increase in the number of persons carried of 343,000, and a reduction of £144 in the receipts. Such was the effect of a reduction of fares for third-class passengers, who constituted 94 per cent. of the whole number of passengers carried on the railway, but there would soon be an increase in the third-class receipts. When the terminal station accommodation was completed at Bombay he believed the traffic would greatly increase. On the 1st of January last the third-class fare by the through mail trains had been restored to 4 pies per mile, from 3 pies to which the fare by ordinary trains had been reduced. The increase in the goods traffic had been 44 per cent. in tons carried, and 20 per cent. in the receipts. The total receipts for the half year ending the 31st of December last amounted to £174,537, against £173,284 in the same half of 1869, showing an increase of £1,253. The total expenditure amounted to £130,502, against £149,260 in the same half of 1869, showing a decrease of £18,758, which was a considerable reduction. The locomotive and carriage department showed a reduction in the cost of driving of 18½ per cent., and in the cost of fuel of 34 per cent. The net profit for the half-year amounted to £44,000, against £24,000 in the corresponding half of 1869, showing an increase of £20,000, or 83 per cent., and the net receipts for the year 1870 amounted to nearly 3 per cent. on the capital expended on the open line. Mr. Hartridge, deputy chairman, seconded the motion for the adoption of the report. After some observations by Mr. Franklin, Lieutenant-Colonel Kennedy, and other shareholders, resolutions were passed adopting the report and statement of accounts.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The Committee met for its fourteenth sitting on Friday, the 8th inst., A. S. Ayrton, Esq., M.P., in the chair. Sir Stafford Northcote, M.P., who had just returned from the American Commission, was added to the Committee, was present, and took an active part in the day's proceedings.

Mr. H. L. Harrison, Secretary to Government in the Controller-General's Department of the Government of Bengal, was called, and examined successively on the following subjects,—the Mint establishments of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay; the pilotage service of Bengal, and the Marine Establishments; Government Securities and Loans for Public Works, &c. The examination, which lasted throughout the day, commenced with the Mint establishments. From the evidence it appears that the silver coinage constitutes the circulation, and that a gold currency (sovereigns) is not in favour in India, the people apparently fancying that it is alloyed sufficiently to depreciate its value. The Mint charges and dues at Calcutta were explained by the witness. There has not been a fresh coinage of gold at the Mint during the last year or two, in consequence of the non-importation of bullion. The bullion received had been so small that it was melted and assayed at a loss. He could not tell whether it was a temporary falling of in bullion receipts, or that the exports would resume their ordinary rate. Both gold and the silver bullion had almost ceased to come in from Europe. The silver exports before 1860 were very large; but, obeying certain commercial laws which had come into operation through the demand for cotton probably, the currency had changed, and the demand for gold and silver bullion had been materially interfered with. The large increase in the trade with India had latterly introduced the European modes of payment. The importation of silver cannot be expected to resume its older proportions, as remittances are made in a different form, tending to a permanent lowering of the rate of exchange between England and India. The falling off in cotton exports which had begun would tend to lower the rate of exchange. He did not know that any specie passed through India to China from Europe.

The examination next turned on receipts from the Department of Marine, Bengal. The marine receipts for 1869-70 he found were £329,953, the most important item being the pilotage dues; the other items being fees by the master-attendants of Calcutta and Bombay. The Calcutta Port Fund, a local marine body, managed the dockyards and paid the Government a contract sum for trading with the stores and dues pertaining to the dock. The amount received from the Calcutta Port Fund was £70,850 a-year. The Company receive the grant and expend it on the maintenance of surveys, &c. The examination of the witness extending to expenditure as well as receipts, the Chairman stopped it, and required that the inquiry should be limited for the present to those receipts from revenue which the witness came to give evidence upon.

Mr. Fawcett: This is a committee sitting to inquire into the whole financial arrangements of the Indian Government, and as a member I feel justified in seeking to obtain from the witness the specific information I require. I do not want mere clerical details, but wider information, such as I can act upon as proofs of mismanagement or maladministration.

The Chairman: The witness cannot supply you with that; his information is limited to the accounts over which he has control at Calcutta.

The inquiry next ranged over a variety of other Government receipts from public works, harbour and channel dues, receipts from sale of stores, receipts from interest derived from Government securities, municipal payment of interest on loans, &c.

It appeared from explanations regarding some of the larger transactions, such as the purchasing of the Canning Railway, and the dealings with the Calcutta Port Fund, the Government had incurred great losses by the property after coming into the Government's hands not proving remunerative; while the Government was paying 5 per cent. for money, it was advancing it at 4 per cent.; and this anomalous system extended over very many large transactions, including those with the banks, and especially with one of the principal banks of India, supported by the Government, which was originally its own creation, remaining always under its protection. The Bank of Bengal paid 10 per cent. for the last twenty years, which had to be set against losses. The Government have invested in the banks altogether about £400,000, and received about 5 per cent. on the whole amount, including the last investment in the old Bombay Bank (12 lakhs). The Government lent money derived from revenue to the banks at less than the market rate, but did not get it back again except at heavy loss. The security given by the banks was good, it being on landed property and house property; still if they did not repay the advances, the Government did not resort to their securities, but operated with the banks upon what appeared to be unsound financial principles, by accepting fresh bills while the old securities remained untouched. The necessity had passed away for the State protection of the banks, but they were, nevertheless, not independent concerns, but were still protected. The recent undertaking of the Government to take a large number of shares in the New Bank of Bombay was stated to have been agreed to, pending a State inquiry into the whole of the banking system of India. In its transactions with the Port Canning Company the Government had suffered great losses. By the Bombay Reclamation Company, which had proved a disastrous failure, the Government had incurred the danger of that establishment's bankruptcy, and experienced great difficulty in securing themselves from the loss of the value of the shares taken in that concern. The banks transacted the business of the Government at a loss, but gained reputation or credit by their known association with the State. In certain cases the Government had taken over the business of municipal establishments, and also public companies, which saved them from falling to pieces through their bankruptcy, and thus gave an opportunity for the public treasury to recoup itself for the money invested in them originally. The investments of the Calcutta Government had been financially bad latterly, so much so that (said Mr. Fawcett) "they were squandering revenue and injuring income by fallacious financial transactions." On the other hand, some of the loans advanced had turned out satisfactory; in these exceptional cases the money being invested in really valuable and productive works of great utility to the country.

The committee reassembled on Tuesday, when Mr. Harrison's examination was continued on items of receipts amounting to a grand total of £1,446,982. The inquiries were directed to the Government's connection with the military funds. One important item amounted to £493,598. The excess of payment over receipts has been £244,953. There were two funds. There was the Bengal Military Fund, which provided pensions for officers of the army. The capital of that fund consisted at present of £473,000, and taking the payments as at present and the receipts as at present there was an annual deficiency of about £74,000, which would exhaust the fund in somewhat less than seven years. Then there was the Military Orphan Fund the capital of which amounted to £480,000. The payments were £62,420 and the receipts £50,180, leaving an annual dificiency of £12,240, which would exhaust the fund in about forty years. It was found difficult to get at the real state of the accounts for want of a balance-sheet, which it was not the custom of the Controller-General's department to issue. A scheme for the superannuation of the Bengal and Calcutta Police Establishment formed the next subject of the committee's inquiries. The superannuation had been effected without the interposition of an actuary; but it was shown that a large sum had been taken from the pockets of the police by the saving of wages, while it was under consideration to further reduce the pay of the police.

A discussion arose through Mr. Fawcett complaining that he could not obtain from the witness the information he required, to show more clearly what he considered the chronic financial blunders and mismanagement of the Government.

The miscellaneous Military receipts, amounting to the total of £1,367,000, were next gone into, but nothing very important was elicited, as showing against the Treasury.

Lieut.-Colonel G. Chesney, of the Bengal Public Works Department, was next called and examined on receipts from Public Works. He had charge of the public works of Bengal from 1861 to 1870. He gave evidence respecting the cost of the Ganges Canal, and its productive resources for irrigation purposes, the receipts from water rates connected with the Ganges Canal and other irrigation establishments, including the principal one of the Orissa Irrigation Establishment. Neither of these had been worked to any considerable profit except in the Madras Presidency. The mode of working the Ganges Canal to supply the water for irrigation was explained by the witness. It was by means of weirs and sluice-gates. The receipts obtained from rents from buildings and houses sub-let by the Public Works Department were explained item by item. Originally the Government derived no revenue from receipts from irrigation sources, the native princes having had the whole primitive system of irrigation under their control; but as the country came more and more into our possession, we took up the irrigation system, constructing new canals, and assuming the management of the Orissa and other irrigation works. The first water-rate was imposed only a few years ago. It was a voluntary tax, as the people could either go to the Government works for the water or obtain it by means at their own disposal. The water capable of being supplied by the Ganges Canal was not equal to the demand, but the works were such that only a limited provision of water could be depended upon in some districts, while in other more convenient districts it was easily attainable. The Ganges Canal had not as yet paid its own expenses, but was destined, as improvements in the works were effected, to become a very profitable source of revenue.

The Orissa Irrigation Works have only lately commenced working. The Government purchased the Orissa works of private owners, and had improved them with the view to revenue from water-rates. Some of the smaller canals paid well. The latter was the case in Madras. The Ganges Canal paid 7½ per cent., but the original expenses of its construction had to be set against its productiveness to the revenue. The Government would not object to encourage private speculation in irrigation works. The principal canal in India was the Ganges Canal, constructed by Colonel Cautley. Its total cost up to the present time had been two millions sterling. The profitable canals of Madras are not for irrigation but navigation purposes. Examined as to the railway system of India, the witness said that every railway in India had been unprofitable as a source of revenue. The three best railways were expected to pay 5 per cent. to revenue as traffic increased. The new short line, the Port Canning railway running between Calcutta and Mutlah, had been all along worked at a loss. It did not pay its own expenses. There had been a loss on it of about £8,000 a-year. The Government had given £400,000 for the railway, to discover the loss of £8,000 a-year.

At nearly the hour of adjournment strangers were ordered to withdraw, and shortly afterwards the committee adjourned.

The committee resumed its sitting on Friday, when Mr. Stewart Reid, junior member of the Bengal Board of Revenue, gave evidence on the land settlements of the N. W. Provinces, showing that the permanent settlement imposed by Sir Charles Wood's order of 1862 was non-operative in the provinces, while short leases and the thirty years' settlement regulations were found to work most to the satisfaction of land holders and renters, and also to the revenue.

Dr. Wilson, Vice-President of the Bombay University, was next called, and gave evidence on the consumption of opium by the people of Malwa Province and those of Rajpootana and other places. The people had come in late years to consume the Malwa opium. They did not smoke but eat it. He advised such an imposition of duty on the drug as would have the effect of checking its consumption. Sir Henry Anderson, of the Bengal Revenue Department, was called, and gave evidence regarding sources of revenue amounting to £279,316 derived from stamps.

Miscellaneous.

MAJOR-GENERAL PEARS.—In the Gazette of Tuesday night official announcement is made that the Queen has conferred upon Major-General Thomas Townsend Pears, C.B., Military Secretary to the Secretary of State for India in Council, the honour of K.C.B.

DUTCH-INDIAN RAILWAY LOAN.—It is notified that the fully paid-up scrip of the Dutch-Indian Railway Five per Cent. Loan can now be exchanged for bonds, at the offices of Messrs. Samuel and Montague.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.—Mr. Ludwig Wiese, lately a partner of Messrs. Siemssen and Co., of China, has joined the Board of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China.

THE CHINA SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH COMPANY (LIMITED) announces that the charge for the transmission of a message of twenty words from London to Hong Kong is £7, and from London to Shanghai, £8. 5s. Half the above rates is charged for every additional ten words.

MARLBOROUGH COLLEGE.—The following are the results of the examinations for the vacant scholarships in this College: Elected to Senior Scholarships—C. L. Graves and J. D. Rogers (equal); C. E. Blackett, ord. proxime accessit. Elected to Junior Scholarships—A. W. C. Saunders, A. H. P. Ewer, A. H. Powles, W. S. Robinson, G. J. Buckley, and C. J. Johnstone. Elected to Indian Scholarships—G. Burge.

MADRAS RAILWAY.—The directors of the Madras Railway Company have issued their report for the half-year ending the 31st. December last. During that period 76 additional miles were completed and opened, extending the line from Gooty to the Toongabudra river. The gross receipts were £227,535, against £293,556 in the corresponding period last year; the deficiency in the net receipts amounted to £33,505. This deficiency is attributed to the falling off in the conveyance of materials for construction and in the carriage of cotton.

BRITISH INDIAN SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The report of the British Indian Submarine Telegraph Company for the half-year ending March 31 last has been issued. The balance available for distribution amounts to £25,328. 11s. 1d., and the directors have declared a dividend on account, of 4s. per share, free of income-tax, which will absorb £23,750, and leave £1,578. 11s. 1d. to be carried forward. The receipts for the months of April and May amounted to £21,797. 6s. 6d., being at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, after deducting working expenses.

THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.—The following is a summary of the business which is to come before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council during the present sittings, which commenced on the 13th June, viz.—From the High Court of Admiralty there are 13 appeals—Bengal 52, Kingdom of Oude 2, Ceylon 2, Hong Kong 1, Malta 1, Supreme Consular Court, Constantinople, 1, Victoria 1, New South Wales 1, the Punjab 2, Madras 1, Canada 5, British Honduras 1, Arches Court of Canterbury 1 (this is the case of Sheppard v. Bennett, which stands "42" on the list).

EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION.—As a subject likely to prove interesting to our readers we notice that Dr. Ghose will deliver a lecture on "Female Education in Bengal," at the Society of Arts, on Friday next. Dr. Underhill is announced to occupy the chair.

RATE OF EXCHANGE.—A short time since the authorities decided to reduce the pay of officers at home, in consequence of the rate of exchange for family remittances having been lowered, but it was discovered that the Military Furlough Rules of 1868 provided for the issue of pay at par. It has now been ascertained that this is also the case with the Uncovenanted Furlough Rules, so far as they affect officers on furlough, and that the attempt to save a few pounds annually can only be carried out at the expense of covenanted servants not drawing maximum or minimum rates, uncovenanted officers on sick leave or private affairs, and uncovenanted pensioners. We hope the authorities will not seek to alter both the Military and Civil Furlough Rules, as it is reported they intend to do, so as to make the proposed saving applicable to Indian officers of both Services on leave. Such a measure would never have been originated in Leadenhall-street, but we do not forget that the Scotch are unco' canny, and that the national influence strongly predominates with "the powers that be."—Home News.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.—At a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, at the London University, on Tuesday night, under the presidency of General Sir H. C. Rawlinson, K.C.B., a paper was read on a journey into the interior of Southern Arabia, by Captain Miles and Mr. Werner Munzinger, with explanatory remarks by the Rev. G. P. Badger. The captain minutely describes in his paper the various incidents of his journey, and amongst other things states that at Beer Ali, a short distance from Aden, there is found abundance of bitumen, which would serve admirably as fuel for the steamers which begin to run between Suez and the Persian Gulf. The party was frequently molested by the Bedouins, but not seriously. Mr. Munzinger's remarks referred chiefly to the geology of the country, and he regrets that the British Government spend so much in fortifications and so little in antiquarian research. Sir H. Rawlinson said that the southern part of Arabia was an exceedingly rich country, and no doubt from the earliest times there had been a high state of civilisation there. He also referred to the curious fact that the people in that part seem to have always preferred queens to rule over them, the earliest known to us being the Queen of Sheba, in the time of Solomon. It was, he considered, a country well worth antiquarian research.

THE ALBERT ASSURANCE COMPANY.—Lord Cairns gave judgment on Thursday as to the claims for indemnity against the Albert by five companies amalgamated with it. The question was whether the shareholders of the Albert were, under the deeds of amalgamation, subject to an unlimited liability to indemnify these companies. Lord Cairns held that it was ultra vires the directors of the Albert to enter into any contract involving liability without limit, for the Albert's original deed of settlement gave no such power, and it was the fundamental rule of the company that, as regards any changes in the deed, they must not authorise a contract which would bring on any shareholder a greater liability than the money subscribed for his shares. But even if it were intra vires the directors to enter into a contract involving unlimited liability, yet he concluded from the terms of the various almagamation deeds that they had not done so, the liability being in each case limited to the funds and assets of the Albert. Though the consent of the shareholders was not formally given to these amalgamation contracts, yet they subsequently became aware that these policies had been taken over, and are bound retrospectively to approve of these grants of assurance, exactly as if made by their own company. Thus these companies are entitled to indemnity against the Albert, but that indemnity is limited to the funds and assets of the Albert, and they must take their place with other creditors. Though not entitled to the costs of winding-up, they are entitled to the costs of establishing their claim.

EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION.—A meeting of the East India Association was held at the rooms of the Society of Arts, on Friday, the 9th of June, Major-General Sir Vincent Eyre, in the chair, when an address was delivered by Sir Bartle Frere, on "The Means of Ascertaining Public Opinion in India." The lecturer dwelt at some length on the advantages of a free press, such as now existed in that country, both among the European and native communities, and on the importance of the natives being fully and freely consulted in all matters affecting their interests, on which latter point he quoted from Sir Donald MacLeod's recent evidence before the Select Committee, and from Sir John Malcolm. He also alluded to the practice of Mountstuart-Elphinstone, Sutherland, and other eminent Indian officials, and added that, from his own personal experience, he could testify that both at Calcutta and Bombay he derived much valuable information from his native colleagues in the Legislative Councils at those Presidencies. "Open Durbar," or public audiences, were usual in India under Mahommedan and Hindoo rulers, equal as being in accordance with the genius of the people and as affording a powerful means by which a ruler could arrive at the state of public feeling in his country. The lecture was an exceedingly able and interesting one, and was listened to throughout with great interest; but as time did not admit of a lengthened discussion, it was resolved, after some remarks from Mr. Tayler and the Chairman, to adjourn the meeting until the lecture shall have been printed and distributed. Cordial votes of thanks to Sir Bartle Frere and to the Chairman closed the proceedings.

A NEW PHILO-INDIAN MOVEMENT.—Among many recent tokens of an increased desire in this country to help forward the moral or material welfare of our Indian fellow-subjects, not the least promising is the formation of several local societies in aid of social progress in India. The first of these was founded a few months since at Bristol, under the auspices of Miss Carpenter, aided by a number of philanthropic friends. Others are in course of formation on similar principles in several of the great northern cities of England and Scotland. For some time a similar movement has been ripening in London, to which the late Mrs. Manning lent all the influence at her command. She lived long enough to know that her efforts had not been in vain, and about the time of her death the London Association had issued its own programme, under the sanction of a numerous council, strengthened by the support of three able vice presidents, viz., Lord Calthorpe, the Dean of Westminster, and Lord Justice James. This association is to act in concert with the Bristol Society, and any others that have or may be formed elsewhere for the same objects. In future these local associations will become branches of the great central society which has yet to be organised. The common objects for which all alike are to work are the imparting of information upon the social condition of the Indian people by means of lectures and conversaziones at home, and of correspondence with leading men in all parts of India; the encouragement of native efforts towards social advancement, especially in the sphere of female education; the maintenance of friendly intercourse between the English and the Indian races; and the enabling native visitors from India to become more familiar than heretofore with the domestic life of Englishmen, and with all that is worth studying in English "ideas, institutions, and customs." A monthly journal, now published at Bristol, will record the progress and results of the society's labours. To all who are interested in an undertaking which holds out the hand of sympathy and help to similar movements already begun in various parts of India, the London association appeals for aid on the one broad condition that all who join it shall meet on "the common ground of absolute neutrality in regard to religion." The necessity for this rule is too obvious to need explaining. On its strict observance, indeed, the whole success of such an undertaking may be said to depend. The birth of the new association was duly celebrated on Thursday, the 8th inst., by an excellent inaugural lecture delivered by its chairman, Mr. J. T. Pritchard, at the Society of Arts' Room. A goodly gathering of Englishmen and natives, under the chairmanship of Mr. Hodgson Pratt, whose name, like Mr. Pritchard's, needs no recommendation to Anglo-Indians in India, honoured the lecturer with an attention worthy of the subject and of his mode of handling it.—Home News.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, June 12.—THE ARMY BILL.—Sir G. GREY elicited that the Government were determined to persevere with the clauses of the Army Bill abolishing purchase and lords-lieutenants' commissions in the militia. The rest of the Bill would, if necessary, be abandoned to facilitate the passing of these essential provisions.—Mr. DISRAELI protested against this breach of faith on the part of the Government towards the House; it was as a measure for the reorganisation of the army, not merely for the abolition of purchase, that the Opposition assented to the Bill, which, if cut down as proposed, would no longer be the same.—Mr. NEWDEGATE added that the Government had obtained supplies upon false pretences, since the House had voted large sums for the purposes of the Bill.—Mr. GLADSTONE denied that the Government had obtained a single farthing for the purposes of the Bill. As to a breach of engagement, the purchase question had, in fact, been treated by the Opposition as the important part of the Bill, and had monopolised their attention. Mr. Disraeli had himself assented to the abolition of purchase, or had at least conveyed that impression, though he afterwards retracted. The fact was, that in consequence of practices of which he would only say that if they were generally adopted the House might as well shut its doors and abdicate all legislative functions, they had reached a stage when they had two questions to answer; first, whether this Bill was to pass; and, second, whether it was to be made the means of obstructing and preventing all the other legislative business of the session. Their answer was, they had determined to do what they could to ensure its passing, and at the same time to clear the way for other business.—Lord ELCHO, Mr. LIDDELL, Mr. BENTINCK, Mr. HARDY, and other members of the Opposition supported Mr. Disraeli's protest against the division of the Bill, while Mr. B. OSBORNE applauded it, on the ground that the second part of the measure was such a miserable piece of legislation that the best thing that could be done was to withdraw it.—In Committee, General HERBERT'S amendment to buy out at once all the subaltern officers was rejected by 78 to 16.—Among other amendments an addition to clause 3, moved by Sir W. RUSSELL, to give officers the option of commuting the price of their commissions with certain deductions, was discussed, and negatived by 222 to 139.—Clause 3 was then passed, and the Committee adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, June 13.—EAST INDIA ADMINISTRATION.—Mr. FAWCETT called attention to a petition from India in regard to the financial administration of that country, and moved a resolution calling for an inquiry by Commission or otherwise, by which evidence can be obtained from native and European inhabitants of India. He did not intend to cast a slur on the Committee of the House now sitting, which he expected would make some valuable and startling revelations; but his everyday experience showed that it could not accomplish all that was needed. The object on which he laid chief stress was to create a mutual good understanding between ourselves and the natives, for no material improvements we might effect in India would content them for being deprived of all share in the administration of their own country.—Mr. G. GREGORY made some remarks on our treatment of Indian feudatories and appeals to the Privy Council.—Mr. G. DUFF opposed the motion, contending that the Committee now sitting had only got through a moderate portion of its labours, that no attempt had been made to shut out evidence, and that it was quite sure to inquire into all the points touched on in this petition. It would be glad, too, to examine any natives who might come before it. Moreover, to send a Royal Commission to India would be like "sending coals to Newcastle," because the country was governed by a perpetual series of Royal Commissions, continually renewed. He examined the various allegations in the petition, showing how unfit they were for inquiry by a Royal Commission, insinuating that Mr. Fawcett had made the suggestion because he found it easier to make broad assertions in the House than to prove them in a Committee.—Mr. C. DENISON and Sir C. WINGFIELD, both members of the Committee, thought it would be stultifying it to appoint a Commission, and that evidence quite as valuable on every point might be obtained in this country as in India. The latter, however, admitted that great discontent with the financial administration was prevalent among the natives. —Mr. AYRTON, the Chairman of the Committee, pointed out the inconvenience of prejudicing its labours, which were being prosecuted with great care and zeal, by appointing a Commission, and dwelt on the ill effect certain to be produced on the native mind by this appearance of arraigning the Indian Government. There was no intention of smothering any part of the inquiry, and every point of financial administration could be fully elucidated in this country. —Sir S. NORTHCOTE took the same view, and appealed to Mr. Fawcett to withdraw his motion, which he did, with some sharp comments on Mr. G. Duff's speech.

THE ARMY BILL.—Various questions were addressed to the Government with a view to elicit the estimated cost of the scheme of promotion and retirement which would have to be established in place of the purchase system, but the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER answered that the matter was not in his department, and Mr. CARDWELL that he had no data for such a calculation.—Clause 4 was agreed to with some verbal amendments. On clause 5, which enacts that the expenditure under the Bill shall be defrayed out of moneys to be voted by Parliament, Mr. HUNT and other members expressed doubts as to the propriety of annual votes for such a matter, and Mr. GRAVES gave notice that on a future occasion he would call attention to the financial side of the question. A motion by Mr. BENTINCK to report progress was defeated by 245 to 131, and clause five, completing part one of the Bill, was agreed to. The next clause (six), relating to enlistments, was the first of those which are to be omitted; but Mr. MCCULLAGH TORRENS, who had given notice of an amendment to it forbidding the engagement of recruits under twenty years, urged that as so much time had been given to the officers, an opportunity should be afforded of discussing the position of the men.—Mr Torrens's claim was supported by Mr. DISRAELI, who reminded Mr. Gladstone of his own dictum in regard to the Reform Bill, that a measure when once introduced became the possession of the House and could not be withdrawn at pleasure. He complained that the House should be placed in an absurd position on a matter of such vital interest.—Mr. GLADSTONE denied there was any analogy between the circumstances of the Reform Bill and the present measure.—After some further conversation on the subject, Sir ROUNDELL PALMER protested against the discredit which was cast by such scenes of "disorder and confusion" on the principle of Parliamentary Government. That principle was that the decision of the majority of the House must be submitted to; and to renew old debates or raise new ones with the mere effect of producing delay would be, he declared, "neither in the interest of the army, nor of the officers of the army, nor of Conservative principles, nor of the party opposite."—The clause was still before the House when the sitting was suspended.

HOUSE OF LORDS, THURSDAY, June 15.—THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.—Lord WESTBURY, in calling attention to the state of the appellate jurisdiction, said it was admitted to be a disgrace to the country. If the Judicial Committee sat de die en diem for the whole time during which the Courts of Chancery and Common Law sat, it would take two whole years to clear off the arrears existing last year; and of course before that was done there would be a fresh accumulation. His remedy would be to create a great court, presided over by a man of great eminence, assisted by an independent staff of judges; but as things were, he would only ask the Lord Chancellor to give him a pledge that within ten days he would bring in a Bill for carrying out his (Lord Hatherley's) own proposal to add two judges from Westminster-hall to the Committee. He would also suggest that some classes of Indian suits should be settled on the spot. He found that from Bengal there were two hundred and seventy-four; whereas from Madras there were only five, and from Bombay only six. It certainly seemed to him that that fact pointed to the possibility of effecting changes in the Bengal Courts which would diminish that disparity. If the Bill to which he had referred were not forthcoming in the time specified, he would move an address to the Crown, and take the sense of their lordships upon it. (Cheers.)—The LORD CHANCELLOR said that whatever pain his noble friend's remarks might give him, it was as nothing compared with what he experienced from the state of the facts. (Hear, hear.) The truth was that the Privy Council system had broken down, chiefly from the loss of no fewer than five of the judges, who though living, had been placed hors de combat by age or infirmity. As regarded the Indian appeals, he understood that owing to the want of skilled transcribers, it ordinarily occupied four or five years before the record could be transmitted to this country.—Lord WESTBURY: In all the cases of which he spoke, the record had been sent over.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said his information was different, and he might mention that a short time ago the cases before their Lordships' House were two years in Miss Shedden's case, which had occupied eight weeks of arrear. Yet their lordships were now hearing the appeals of the present session. That was, at any rate, an encouraging illustration of the good effects which arose from a period of continuous sitting. At the same time, he did not seek to extenuate the undoubted amount of the evil, but he trusted that their lordships would not think her Majesty's Government had shown themselves at all unmindful of the importance of the subject. (Cheers).—Lord CAIRNS said it certainly seemed to him that the Government cared very little about the matter.—Lord ROMILLY urged the passing of a temporary measure, and advised her Majesty's Government to lay his Bill on their lordships' table without further delay.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said he would at once take steps for expediting the Indian appeals.—The subject then dropped.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, June 15.—MR. GRANT DUFF AND MR. FAWCETT.—Mr. GRANT DUFF wished to say that he was wrong the other night when he said that the hon. member for Brighton had exercised an extreme right in altering the terms of his motion. He wished also to retract any moral blame which he might have been supposed to attach to the proceeding of the hon. member. He believed the words would not be found to bear the interpretation which the hon. member put upon them, but any fragment of moral blame which they contained he withdrew. (Hear, hear.)—Mr. FAWCETT expressed his thanks to the Under Secretary for withdrawing the words he had used on a previous evening. Since he had entered public life he was careful in avoiding any course which might expose him to unjust suspicion. (Hear, hear.)

THE ARMY BILL.—On the Army Bill being again taken up in committee there was some discussion as to when Mr. McCullagh Torrens's resolution as to enlistments should be considered. Ultimately it was arranged that it should be brought forward as a new clause on Monday next. On clause 7, relating to the transfer of the jurisdiction of the lords-lieutenants to the War Office, Mr. CARDWELL, in reply to various inquiries, stated that first commissions would continue to be recommended by the lord-lieutenant; but when a subaltern had distinguished himself by service, then, on the recommendation of the commanding officer, or of the colonel on the staff, he would be selected for promotion or for a commission in the line. Promotions in the militia would be made on the same principles as in the regular army, the Inspector-General of the Reserve Forces being always consulted with respect to every promotion.—The clause was then agreed to, and the rest of the Bill in its revised and reduced form was passed through Committee, under a running fire of criticism from Lord ELCHO, and other members, but without any practical opposition in the shape of divisions.

THE REPORT OF THE ARMY BILL.—In reply to Sir M. LOPES, Mr. GLADSTONE said he could not state exactly when the report of the committee on the Army Bill would be brought up, but it would follow as soon as arrangements would admit the debate on the Ballot Bill.

NOTICES OF MOTION.—Mr. CANDLISH gave notice that on that day week he should move a resolution on the subject of the Abyssinian war.

GENERAL BARROW AND THE OUDE TALOOKDARS.—It is stated by a correspondent of the Urdu Delhi Gazette that the subscription raised by the Oude talookdars to be distributed in charity, in gratitude for General Barrow's restoration to health, has amounted to Rs. 20,000.

NAUTICAL INCIDENTS.

The str. Apis, Forti, which arrived at Trieste June 4, from Bombay, reports that on May 6, four days after leaving Bombay, she was caught in a very heavy cyclone, that lasted for eleven hours, veering from E. to W. to E., and that, from the 7th to the 12th, the weather in the Gulf of Arabia was very stormy at S.E.

The str. Thames Belle, from Calcutta, at Gravesend, June 9, experienced two heavy gales between the south end of Madagascar and the Cape of Good Hope, which she passed April 3.

The Peru, Barcham, of and from Shields, for Galle, with coal, ran on the Cockle Sand, Yarmouth, June 10, during a dense fog, but was assisted off and brought up in the roads. She does not make more than an inch of water per hour, but draws too much water to go into Yarmouth.

The Octavia, Tragarah, which arrived at Falmouth, June 13, from Moulmain, has carried away bowsprit, cutwater, and all attached, having been in collision.

The Astarte, which arrived at Dundee June 9, from Calcutta, caught the ground whilst entering the river, floated off, making no water, after remaining nearly an hour.

The Poonah, from Calcutta to London, was spoken March 10, in lat. 8 S., long. 90 E., with loss of foretop-gallant-mast, jibboom, and mainroyal-masthead.

The Gosforth, for Madras, in leaving the East India Docks, June 14, came in collision, and lost jibboom and headgear.

The str. Olga, of Hull, Hindson, from Calcutta to London, with a general cargo, put into Gibraltar, June 14, with tubes leaky.

THE AGE AND PHYSIQUE OF A SOLDIER.

The Lancet is glad to find that a matter to which we have more than once adverted has at length attracted the notice of a great military authority. Lord Sandhurst, in a very effective and statesmanlike speech, recently called the attention of the Upper House to the ages of our recruits and of the men forming our standing Army in connection with the subject of the formation of an Army Reserve, and the supply of soldiers for our Indian and Colonial possessions. The question is one of a grave character, on which physiological considerations are capable of throwing some light. On looking at the German system of organisation, there is one point Lord Sandhurst urged, which ought never to be forgotten by those who have to consider the elements out of which combative armies had to be formed—viz., the age of the men. The immature striplings recruited for our Army are quite unfit for field or foreign service. It was the complaint of the First Napoleon, and the experience of our own generals in the Peninsula, that such men, however much they may serve to swell the nominal, add nothing in reality to the effective strength of an army. They have not the necessary physique or powers of endurance to sustain the work they are called upon as soldiers to perform, and we consequently find that during a campaign, or on Indian service, they speedily break down and serve only to embarrass the movements of a force by swelling its sick list. The young troops hastily raised by Gambetta during the late war were quite unable to withstand the old order and hardier soldiers of the hostile Army. The Germans went through their ranks like a locomotive through a flock of sheep. All medical officers agree in the opinion that regiments composed in great part of very young men, such as the Duke of Richmond showed was the case with the 54th Regiment, now under orders for India, are unfit for tropical service; and we find that Dr. Muir, the medical head of the British Force in India, has declared that the evil has so culminated that it might be impossible to trust her Majesty's regiments hereafter. The Director-general has also strongly expressed his opinion that young undrilled men under twenty years of age should never, on the score of health alone, be sent to India. In point of fact, the growth and development of the body have not been fully attained before twenty-five. Mr. Cardwell has, however, become impressed with the necessity of attending to the views expressed by medical officers and others on this head, for we find that he has undertaken to weed regiments of their young and immature men before embarking them, and to procure older soldiers as substitutes by offering them a bounty to volunteer for Indian service. Of course we must take men when we can get them, and if they will enlist at eighteen and not at twenty, we must be content to maintain our young recruits at home until, by good feeding and training, they are rendered fit for their duties. Unless the number of soldiers of three years' service that are allowed to volunteer for the reserve be limited, it is evident that we may be organising failure for ourselves. When the formation of a reserve force was contemplated, we urged that some scheme might, at the same time, be devised for securing that all youths at our public and national schools should be compelled to undergo some kind of military training, and we still hold that such could be done with benefit to the youths drilled, and with injury to no one.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

Second Edition, with Additions.
To be had of all Booksellers.

PROFESSIONAL OPINIONS
SUPPORTING AND RECOMMENDING THIS SYSTEM.

March, 1871.
I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of recommending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.
C. M. MILLER, M.D.,
Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. BROWNE,—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be overrated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out at all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys.
H. EYRE, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.
For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of obedience and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the Government shall advise that physical drill being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.
Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere martinet. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly; have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.
It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and, therefore, succeeds admirably.
JAMES RUNTZ, Head Master.

Kingsland Middle Class Schools, Sandringham-road, March 7, 1871.
Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites of youth, and if such exercise be conducted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor, but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained, the result will be all that can be desired.
ROBERT LANE, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.
It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon the physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To insure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good disciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of these qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.
THOMAS WILSON, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies,
Benyon-house, 32, Culford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.
Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their schoolfellows, a point too frequently overlooked, when a large number are being drilled.

CLEVELAND'S WALNUT POMADE

Cures Baldness, produces Whiskers, darkens Red and restores Grey Hair to its natural colour.

Vice-Chancellor Stuart, in granting an injunction protecting Cleveland's Pomade, said:—"It is clear that Cleveland's is the only real and original Walnut Pomade which appears to have been made for twenty years, and I regret I cannot restrain defendants from pirating the name of Walnut, which, being a general one, any dishonest person can adopt."

Sold in pots at 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 3s. 6d. By post for twenty-four stamps. Order "CLEVELAND'S" of any Chemist in the World.

Depot—37, POLAND-STREET, Five Doors from Oxford-street, London.

RUPTURES.—BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS, Perfected and Exhibited in the Great Exhibition of 1851, is allowed by upwards of 200 Medical Gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of Hernia. The use of a steel spring, so often hurtful in its effects, is here avoided; a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit) forwarded by post on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the Manufacturer, Mr. WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London.

Price of a Single Truss, 16s., 21s., 26s. 6d., and 31s. 6d.; postage, 1s. Price of Double Truss, 31s. 6d., 42s., and 52s. 6d.; postage, 1s. 8d. Umbilical, 42s. and 52s. 6d.; postage, 1s. 10d.

Post-office Orders payable to JOHN WHITE, Postoffice, Piccadilly.

NEW PATENT.

ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, &c.—The material of which these are made is recommended by the Faculty as being peculiarly elastic and compressible, and the best invention for giving efficient and permanent support in all cases of weakness and swelling of the Legs, Varicose Veins, Sprains, &c. It is porous, light in texture, and inexpensive, and is drawn on like an ordinary stocking. Price 4s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 10s. to 16s. each; postage, 6d.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

FOR BAD LEGS, BAD BREASTS, scorbutic and scrofulous sores, this is a genuine specific. The grateful and earnest gratitude of thousands who have experienced its unrivalled power over these complaints, and who have been raised from prostrate helplessness and a condition loathsome to themselves and others, renders it quite unnecessary to enlarge in this place upon its extraordinary virtues. The parts affected should be bathed with lukewarm water, and when the pores are thereby opened, the Ointment should be well rubbed in at least twice a day. It is always advisable to take Holloway's Pills in these disorders, as this much assists the Ointment's action. The Pills check the fever, purify the blood, and eject all morbid matter engendered by these diseases.

Summary and Review.

FOR some reason not yet ascertained the first of the monsoon mails from Bombay, with news and letters down to May 31, will not reach London before Tuesday evening. As it will only give four days' later news than the one which came in last Saturday week, and as the next mail is reported due at the proper time, we have decided to publish on the usual day such matter as may be available for our purpose from other sources.

WE are sorry to learn from a Bombay telegram of June 21 that a fearful hurricane has destroyed the crops about Bandah; the amount of damage being reckoned at half-a-million sterling.

A CALCUTTA telegram of June 22 states that Mr. Robert Stewart, of the firm of Messrs. Gladstone, Wylie, and Co., has been appointed a member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council; and that the Bank rate of discount has been reduced one per cent. Money is reported easy.

ACCORDING to a Bombay telegram of June 23, the latest advices from Kabul report some fresh successes of Yakoob Khan, who, like the good general he is, appears to have lost no time in marching forward upon Kandahar. That stronghold however should not fall in a hurry, if its present garrison of picked soldiers from Kabul only remain true to their salt. With the fall of Kandahar would end for a time at least the stormy reign of Shere Ali. What measure of support he may expect meanwhile from the Indian Government may be gathered from the tone of a short article in the Delhi Gazette of May 25, unless the writer of it has spoken with a certainty he had no business to assume. The Government of India, he says, "simply declines on the score of cost and trouble to interfere in Afghanistan, no matter what happens. The de facto ruler for the time being of those wild people will be recognised by the Government of India; he shall have a certain number of muskets, a specified quantity of gunpowder, a field-battery of artillery perhaps, and so many rupees, and then be told to hold his own if he can. Beyond that the British Government will not go, unless it be to offer an asylum and a decent subsistence allowance to any refugee from that quarter."

ANOTHER new hill-station will shortly be added to the growing number of such stations in British India. Between Poonah and Mahableshwar lies the lofty ridge of Mandar Deo, about 1,200 feet higher than the former. This ridge Mr. Lawson of the Engineer Department is already surveying, with a view to reporting on its fitness to hold one European regiment.

IN India there are some things regarding which the English resident does well to remain in blissful ignorance. It would not for instance improve his jaded appetite to pry too closely into the mysteries of his kitchen, nor would the flavour of his mutton be much enhanced by studying the movements of the living bazaar-fed sheep. On the same principle, if we may judge from the description given in a Calcutta paper, no denizen of that favoured city should go too near the slaughter-houses of Nurkuldangah. A writer in the Englishman tells us what he saw on a visit he made in company with several other English gentlemen to that sweet-smelling storehouse of pleasant sights. Instead of slaughter-houses he found only a strip of ground hard by a dirty tank. It was here the cattle were being slaughtered. The carcasses were hung from poles protected by no kind of roof, and the process of skinning and cleaning went on under the blazing afternoon sun. One narrow shed indeed there was, which contained nothing but some poles for hanging the carcasses of bullocks. The meat sent out from this shed bears a very good name in the market, but the samples which the writer saw hardly tallied with the popular report. Behind this shed was a horribly noisome ditch reeking with the traces of "putrid blood and decaying matter." In spite of some lime freshly thrown over the worst part of it, the stench was most sickening. Behind this the lean pariah dogs were holding carnival over a large mound of bones, in the style with which Byron has made us but too familiar through his simile about the fig that is peeled "when the fruit is fresh." Other sights equally appetising met the visitor's eye in all directions. The little water that was used on cleanly pretexts in this foul place was of "a dirty greenish hue." There seemed no way of hindering the dogs outside from continuing their meals at night within the shed. A serried mass of vultures sat composedly within a few yards of the hanging carcasses, "watching the place with hungry, staring eyes," while swarms of flies were busily feasting on the offal that lay about, and on a heap of something that was meant to pass for meat. There were no appliances for cleanliness, nor any kind of supervision. And yet the scene thus laid before us had not revealed itself at its worst. "If you call this filth, I wonder what you would have said to Sunday's exhibition," was the remark made by one of the visitors. The writer from whom we have taken this pleasing picture appeals to his fellow-visitors on behalf of its truth, and declares that no one who saw that filthy den could help acknowledging the justice of Mr. Hogg's interference with the Calcutta slaughter-houses. We fear that a good many others besides himself refrained from eating their accustomed dinners for some days at any rate after his statements had been made public.

THE upper grades of the Indian Telegraph Service have petitioned the Government of India for a proper revision of their leave and pension rules. They point out that the extent to which their ranks have long been recruited from England, and chiefly by the sons of old Indian officers and civilians, entitles them to like conditions of leave and pension as their relatives in the military and civil services. They have the same "hometies," they are "equally subject to climatic influences," which necessitate frequent visits to Europe, and their duties "involve as a rule an excessive amount of exposure, or of arduous office duty day and night, such as officers of the military or covenanted civil services are seldom or never subjected to." For all these reasons, they plead for a fair revision of rules which were "framed to meet the wants of a subordinate service composed principally of natives." It is further declared that the efficiency of their service depends largely on the openings granted them for keeping their professional knowledge up to the ever rising level of European progress. As a proof of the inadequacy of existing furlough rules, they refer to the fact that several officers of their department have lately been sent home on duty, for the purpose of studying all the latest improvements in electrical and telegraphic science. Now that the Civil Engineers and the Telegraph Department have led the way in seeking for redress of their just grievances, we may expect to see other branches of the Uncovenanted Service follow their example. They all alike suffer at present under the same disabilities. That is to say, the treatment of the English officers therein, in respect of leave and pension rules, is regulated, not by the principles applied to gentlemen of the same race and class in the Covenanted Services, but by those which serve well enough for the mass of native officials under the Indian Government. The unfairness of such a method is so patent, and so utterly irrational, that we cannot but look for some early attempt to place the European members of the Uncovenanted Service on the same, or nearly the same, footing with the Covenanted in respect of those advantages or indulgences which the conditions of their employment render equally desirable for both. It should at least be laid down as an absolute rule that Europeans in any branch of the public service are entitled to different rates of pay and pension and to different terms of furlough and retirement from the natives in the same branch.

THE following concessions have been granted by the Secretary of State for India in Council to the subscribers to the Madras Medical Fund and their families, with effect from 1st April, 1870:—

ANNUITY BRANCH.

A grant equal in value to ten large annuities.

The grant of five large annuities, and one small annuity annually, and of an extra small annuity biennially from 1870.

CHARITY BRANCH.

An increase of 23 per cent. per annum on the rates of pension which existed in 1868, to widows and to daughters over age, and of 28 per cent. per annum on the same rates to sons and daughters under age.

The pensions of widows and of daughters were increased by the service 5 per cent. from 1st January, 1869. All the pensions from the Charity Branch will, therefore, be 28 per cent. higher from 1st April, 1870, than they were in 1868.

OUR correspondent, writing on the subject of the Military Funds, appears, we think, to have taken fright at a ghost of his own raising. Not that the fear he expresses, and which many others doubtless share with him, is in itself unreasonable, for who would not turn pale at the possible collapse of a fund to which he had regularly subscribed for the benefit of his future widow? But in the present instance such fears are founded on imperfect knowledge of the facts. It is some time since the Indian Government took over the management of the Indian Military Funds, pledging itself to meet all charges for pensions and advances on account of officers who entered the Indian army before 1859 and paid their regular subscriptions to the funds in question. There is no fear therefore of any loss befalling the widows and orphans of present subscribers, whatever may happen to the funds themselves. Their probable exhaustion within fifteen years simply means their gradual absorption into the general military accounts of the Indian Government. As Mr. Harrison pointed out in his evidence before the Finance Committee, "it did not follow that these funds were not solvent, because they were no longer credited with interest on the capital which was in the hands of the Government."

THERE is some talk of appointing two or three permanent judges to the Privy Council with a salary matching their high office. Among those named for such appointments is Sir Barnes Peacocke, than whom no fitter choice could well be made.

WE are sorry to record the death of Colonel George Haly, who died at St. Leonard's on the 19th instant of heart-disease, at the age of sixty-one. Colonel Haly entered the Madras Army in 1826, and tasted the hardships as well as the excitement of war in the trying Kimedy campaign of 1834-36 against the Khonds. In this campaign he was twice wounded. As a lieutenant he served in the China War of 1842 and was made a police magistrate at Hong Kong. As Captain of the 41st N.I., he raised and commanded the Golconda Sebundee Rifles from 1846 to 1854. Soon afterwards he was sent to raise and command the Moplah Police Corps in Malabar. After the amalgamation Colonel Haly was transferred from his old regiment to the command of the 108th Foot, whence he retired on full pay in 1864. From that time Colonel Haly's energies were largely devoted to the discussion of Indian questions in the press. His various pamphlets and letters on Indian Fisheries, on the Food Products of India, and on matters concerning the Indian army attest the workings of a busy intelligent brain, well stocked with practical knowledge of the subjects he took in hand.

THE appointment of a Select Committee to test the practicability of several schemes for linking the Mediterranean by a railway with the Persian Gulf will at any rate ensure a fair hearing for that particular scheme on which the partisans of Mr. W. P. Andrew have set their hearts. That scheme found an earnest advocate on Friday last in Sir G. Jenkinson, who at once bespoke attention, if nothing more, by quoting the offer of the Turkish Ambassador to grant free carriage, by the Euphrates route, to her Majesty's Indian mails, so long as the line remained in the hands of the Turkish Government. Sir George enlarged on the advantages of an alternative route to India, which would save at least 1,000 miles of distance and a week of time, and, so far from clashing with the Red Sea route, would mainly benefit the provinces of North-Western India, leaving to the Suez Canal all the heavy traffic and the entire trade with Southern India. He also drew a favourable comparison, which some people may not take so readily for granted, between the climate of the Red Sea and that of the Persian Gulf. There may be something to choose between them, but how much is another question; the exact quantity being, we should think, expressible by the difference in feeling between being roasted and being fried. No doubt however the navigation of the Persian Gulf is the less dangerous and difficult of the two. Mr. Brassey, following suit in a temperate speech, quoted Captain Tyler's opinion in favour of the route proposed, and avowed his belief that the high estimates of traffic adopted by Sir G. Jenkinson were by no means exaggerated; while the line itself, if built on the new kind of narrow guage, would cost a good deal less than the estimates.

AMONG those who backed Sir G. Jenkinson's prayer for a Committee was Mr. Eastwick, whose apparent leaning towards the Tigris route did not blind him to the actual advantages of the Euphrates Valley Line from the engineering point of view. The perfect flatness of the valley was, in his eyes, "a sovereign recommendation" for railway purposes, and his own acquaintance with much of the ground marked out for the proposed line lent much weight to his remarks on the ease with which it could be constructed and the extent to which it would develop the local traffic. More traffic might indeed be assured by the Tigris route, but then no one knew what the difficulties of that route were. As for the Trebizond line, the mountains in the way seemed to put that out of the discussion altogether. Another speaker on the same side, Mr. Kinnaird, argued the question from a more insular point of view. England being the workshop of the world, an enterprise which would give employment to a large number of English workmen must end in bringing more money into England. Mr. Cave on the other hand spoke in favour of the Trebizond route, which may be shorter, but would certainly be far costlier and less useful to England, than the Euphrates Valley line. Mr. Dodson for his part avowed a preference, born of his travels in Turkey, for the line of the Tigris Valley. The only two speakers who opposed the demand for a Committee were Sir C. Wingfield and Mr. Aytoun. The latter grounded his opposition on what might happen if the Committee reported in favour of a line through some part of Turkey. We should be let in for some kind of virtual guarantee, which would either embroil us with the Arabs of the Euphrates Valley, or entangle us in another great war for the support of Turkey herself. Besides using the latter argument, Sir C. Wingfield condemned the Euphrates Valley scheme as wholly futile and superfluous. Such a line could never compete with the Suez Canal route, because the through traffic on a long line of railway has never been known to pay. There were neither roads nor people to speak of along the Valley, and the land was going more and more out of cultivation, so that no local traffic could be expected. Sir Charles could not even see of what use the proposed line would be to India in the event of an invasion. We may always depend upon the line through Egypt, and if an alternative route be needed, what better than the old Cape route, by which reinforcements were forwarded to India in 1857? Sir Charles apparently believes that in times of crisis, when time is everything, the longest way round from England is the shortest way to India. He is even reported in the Times as declaring that the Mutiny was "suppressed before a single soldier could reach India by the Overland Route!" Surely the reporter must have been napping, not Sir Charles himself.

Mr. Grant Duff, speaking for the Government, avowed its readiness to grant the desired Committee, if it was distinctly understood that the Government would not pledge itself in any way to any one of the objects or assumptions implied in the demand for such a committee. It proclaimed beforehand through the Under-Secretary for India its perfect innocence of any foregone conclusion, even of a belief in the possibility of connecting the two seas by a railway of any sort. Mr. Grant Duff however was ready to admit the importance of the question raised, and the great advantages that would accrue both to England and India, if the Committee could only prove that the "physical, political, and financial difficulties" in the way of such an enterprise might indeed be overcome. In so saying he was fully justified by a fair review of the facts. Now that the Suez Canal is in good working order, an alternative route by the Persian Gulf may seem to be a matter of less urgent need than it did a little while back. Nevertheless an alternative route which would enable us at a pinch to send troops to Kurrachee in a fortnight and mails at any time to India twice or thrice a week, is well worth considering both on political and commercial grounds. Whatever may come of the inquiry however, we may rest assured that the Government will not rashly pledge itself to any measure that would burden England with fresh obligations to save the Turkish Empire from going to pieces.

At this evening's meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, a paper will be read by Captain A. F. Harcourt on "Kulu, Lahoul, and Spiti," and another by Major Sladen on the "Expedition from the Irrawaddy into South-Western China." The countries in question, which lie at the very opposite ends of our Indian Empire, are almost equally unknown to the bulk of English readers, and yet claim about equal attention in connection with two important trade routes from India, leading, the one into Central Asia, the other into the richest provinces of Western China.

Tiger Shooting.—Mr. Alexander Raitt, son of Major Raitt, of the House of Correction, is following in the steps of his father, who is well known as one of the Nimrods of the East. On May 9th and 11th he killed two fine tigers, one ten feet long, 1ft. 8in. across the forearm, and 2ft. 3in. round the neck. Both were found near a village called Hallial, a few miles from Carwar. For some time past they had been the terror of the natives, for, although they had not taken to man-eating, their raids on the cattle in the villages prevented the people from venturing about after dusk.—Times of India.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE INDIAN SERVICES, &c., REPORTED SINCE LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s Forces.—Col. G. T. Haly, Madras Retired, at St. Leonard's-on-Sea, June 19, aged 61; Major gen. C. C. Pratt, K.S.F., R.M.L.I., at Wells, June 16, aged 80; Lieut. gen. T. G. Higgins, col. R.A., at Sloane-street, June 20, aged 83.

Bengal.—Lieut. col. W. F. Steer, late H.E.I.C.S., at Marazion, Cornwall, June 12.

Madras.—Lieut. Brown, Acting Assistant Commissary, in charge of the Government bakery at Saidapett, Madras Presidency, May 19; Charles A. Dobbs, Deputy Conservator of Forests, son of Major gen. R. S. Dobbs, for many years Judicial Commissioner of Mysore, at Shimoga, Mysore, April 9.

Bombay.—T. Ogilvy, late Bombay C.S., son of the late Sir W. Ogilvy, Bart., at Princes-street, June 16, aged 61.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

THE NEW HILL-STATION OF PACHMARI.

Dr. Townsend, Sanitary Commissioner for the Central Provinces, has lately drawn up a very full report of the Pachmari plateau, with special reference to its fitness as a station for European troops. The Pachmari Hills are included in a range which forms the northern face of the Satpuras, and overlooks the Nerbudda Valley along its whole length. From Bankheri, the nearest railway station in the valley, the road to Singhanama, twenty miles off at the foot of the hill, lies over hard and rocky ground, which offers no difficulty to the traveller. From the latter place it winds up for thirteen miles to the top of the plateau, which rises more than two thousand feet above its base, and 3,500 feet above the sea level. This part of the road could easily be made good for carts. The plateau itself covers about eight square miles with its irregular outline. It is about four miles long by one broad. Three peaks, each 1,000 feet higher than the plateau itself, rise sheer up from its western edge, while its southern and south-eastern faces fall as abruptly down to the valley of the Denwa. Its undulating surface slopes gradually from west to east. It is still on the whole well-wooded, in spite of the clearances already made on some of the slopes. The Peepal, Mohwa, Sâl, and other large timber trees grow about the rocks and grassy slopes in frequent clumps, which give a park-like appearance to the landscape. The ground consists of Mahadeo sand-stone, "a coarse porous grit with hard iron earth partings." This is generally covered with a reddish brown loam, largely mixed with sand, immediately under which beds of gravel may often be found. No drier or cleanlier site could be desired for building upon, and, once the roads are made, out-door exercise will always be possible after the heaviest rains. The plateau is effectually drained by a stream which winds downward from the west until it passes over the eastern cliffs by an abrupt plunge of several hundred feet into the valley of the Denwa. A few swampy spots are found along its course after the rains, but these could easily be drained. The stream itself, however shrunken in the hot weather, never runs dry; and plenty of pure soft water might always be obtained from wells sunk near the stream.

From observations taken in 1869 and 1870 it appears that the mean temperature of Pachmari in May is about 86 degrees, which would make it 3 degrees cooler than Jabalpur, 7 degrees cooler than Seoni, and 10 degrees cooler than Nagpur. During the rains the difference is still more in favour of Pachmari. In the hottest weather the temperature is not uncomfortable for more than two or three hours in the day, when it sometimes reaches 100 degrees, which is a trifle compared with the heat in many stations of Upper India. The rainfall at Pachmari from June to October amounted in 1870 to 45½ inches, which equals the average of stations in the plains, and falls short by 30 inches of the rainfall at Jabalpur. In the winter the climate is very pleasant, frosts being not infrequent, although the mean temperature is little below that of Seoni and Jabalpur.

An ill repute for malaria once hung about the Pachmari ridge, a repute which it cannot be said to deserve. Without doubt the wood-clothed valleys that encircle the hills are as unhealthy as might be expected from the setting in of the rains until December; but so abruptly does the hill itself rise above these valleys to a sheer height on the southern and eastern sides of 1,800 and 2,000 feet, that no malaria from below can reach it. What there is must be developed on the spot. Dr. Townsend's inquiries among the villagers led to the discovery that ague to a limited extent prevails among them in the autumn months. This however they ascribe to the water of the Banganga which winds through the plateau, and their belief is that the use of well-water would extinguish ague altogether. The general healthiness of the place seems fairly arguable from the experience of other than the native inhabitants. An English gentleman lived there for 20 months together in very good health, without any return of his former ague. An English officer who had passed eleven months there had improved in health during his stay. A pretty large gang of prisoners, who had been working there for the same period, showed on the whole a favourable bill of health.

Besides all its advantages in the way of soil and climate, the plateau offers ample space for outdoor amusements, the surrounding scenery is unusually attractive and the neighbourhood full of interest. The site for the barracks has been well chosen by Colonel Baigrie. It lies high, on a ridge open to the westerly or hot-weather winds, with good drainage on both sides, especially at the back. On a neighbouring slope lies the bazaar. Westward of the barracks, at some distance, will spread the civil station, some way below which a large tank is being dug, in order to ensure a steady supply of water in the hot weather. The wells intended to supply pure drinking water should not be less than fifty or more than a hundred and fifty yards from the stream itself, whose waters, filtering through the soil, would probably form their sole source of supply. Dr. Townsend thinks that the plateau has been sufficiently cleared of wood already, and that what remains should be carefully preserved. No time should be lost in bringing the clearings under cultivation. The soil is too light for wheat, but buckwheat, millet, and other coarse grains, with potatoes, would yield good crops. On the whole, then, Dr. Townsend succeeds in impressing us favourably with the new Sabathoo of the Central Provinces. He has not been tempted to overdraw the picture, and the very shadows he has worked in should tend to secure for the new station a better chance of ultimate success.

ENLISTMENTS FOR THE INDIAN ARMY.

If the present Ministry are sincere in their expressions of desire to improve the military system of this country, they should be thankful to Lord Sandhurst and Mr. Torrens for urging upon their notice the mischievous impolicy of filling up the ranks of an army designed mainly for foreign service with "immature striplings" of seventeen and eighteen years of age. With regard to the mischievous wastefulness of such a process there appears indeed to be but one opinion among competent judges. Common sense, medical science, and military experience alike tend to establish the broad rule that, for all purposes of active soldiering, recruits under twenty years of age are fit for nothing but to choke up hospitals and fill untimely graves. Growing boys, whose bones have not yet lost the character of gristle, have no business in the rough game of war or in the barrack life of regiments serving under a tropical sun. In either case they are apt to "die off like flies," or rotten sheep, or infants in the slums of crowded cities. Medical witnesses all declare that the process of converting gristle into bone is still far from completion in youths of eighteen. In the Crimean Campaign, according to Dr. Lyons, youths under twenty "succumbed at once to the hardships of campaigning, or perished after operations performed for wounds;" a result sufficiently explained by their physical unfitness to stand the rude tests which even older men could not always face with impunity. "On being examined after death, the ends of the long bones of the legs and arms still showed the cartilaginous state, being incompletely knit." Gristle in fact cannot be expected to do the work of perfect bone and fully hardened muscle, as Lord Hardinge owned with regret when he described before the Sebastopol Committee the kind of recruits he had sent out to Lord Raglan. Of course the latter officer protested that he would rather have no recruits at at all than boys who came out only to fall sick and die, and equally of course his opinion was shared by so experienced a lieutenant as Sir De Lacy Evans. Not less decisive were the terms in which Wellington and Bonaparte proclaimed their objections to the employment of boy recruits in the field. It was not with such that the latter won Austerlitz, or "greatly stood at bay" in the one-sided struggle of 1814. Sir John Burgoyne, the Nestor of the British Army, has lent the weight of his long experience to Mr. Torrens's motion for limiting the age of enlistment to twenty. We need hardly point to the recent failure of "Gambetta's boys" to make head against the full-grown warriors of Germany, or remind our readers that the Indian Empire was neither won, nor virtually regained at Delhi, by the arms of young soldiers under twenty. If Sir Charles Wingfield's story however be true, the derision with which the Sikhs regarded the boyish "dumpies" sent out from England in 1858, saying that not with such soldiers did we win our battles in the Punjab, should quicken the efforts of army reformers and administrators to abolish once for all the practice of recruiting our Indian garrisons with regiments largely composed of immature striplings. On this point at least there ought to be no hesitation. If medical evidence be worth anything, it is certain that India is no country for that class of soldiers which dies off or gets invalided in the first years of service. To "dumpy" men as such there is no valid objection, if they are full-grown and broad-shouldered; for these were the men who helped to beat the Sikhs themselves at Sobraon and Goojrat, and who weathered the tug of long campaigns better on the whole than their taller comrades. Nobody ever complained of the dumpy Goorkhas, or of the short but broad-chested, strong-limbed veterans of the Bengal or Madras Fusiliers.

What everyone who thinks at all on the subject should desire, is a clear understanding that henceforth no recruits for Indian or active service shall be enlisted under twenty years of age. With regard especially to India this point may be deemed of the very first importance. Whether the Indian army of the future shall be local or imperial, it must above all things be an efficient army, and thorough efficiency excludes the notion of a large percentage of mere boys. To say nothing of the wicked waste of life involved in yearly sending out to India so many hundred young recruits, of whom a large proportion are certain to die prematurely, it is intolerable that the Indian revenues should be needlessly burdened with the cost of continually replacing such useless soldiers. If the Indian army were once more made local, the India Office would take good care to feed it with recruits of the proper age. If however it must continue to form a part of the War Office system, we can but hope the best from Mr. Cardwell's promise to carry out the wishes of Parliament, as contained in the recent Address to the Crown. Our hopes however would rest on a stronger foundation if we could feel quite certain that the Government realised the full importance of enlisting men instead of boys for foreign service. It is not enough to promise that, "as far as practicable," no recruits under twenty shall be sent out to India; we should be better pleased to hear that an order had been issued absolutely forbidding the despatch of any soldier under twenty, if not of any under twenty-one. There is really no good reason why such a rule should not be enforced throughout the whole regular army, if Mr. Cardwell would only have the courage to carry out Lord Sandhurst's scheme for turning the Militia into the nursery of the Line. When so much is to be said in favour of a plan which would secure to every young recruit of eighteen two years' training in the Militia before he was allowed to enter the Line, we cannot be content with the mere assumption that a steady flow of trained soldiers from the former to the latter could not be reckoned upon under fair conditions of pay and service. Mr. Cardwell's deprecation of "great and violent changes" in this respect sounds curiously irrelevant from the lips of a Minister who has just been abolishing purchase, teaching the Horse Guards its proper place, and transferring the control of the Militia from the counties to the Crown.

ENGLISH PUBLIC OPINION ON THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Mr. Fawcett was quite right in attempting on the 13th inst. to supply further information for the benefit of the public in England, but he was wrong regarding the means proposed.

The best information regarding the state of India is to be found in the annual Reports of District Officers, whether styled Collectors, or Magistrates, or Deputy Commissioners, or Political Agents. Hitherto these reports have not, I believe, been fully revealed to the home Government, for the so-called abstracts are too apt to reveal the pleasant side of the picture, and to pass over the dark.

The reports of the Prefects in France a year ago furnish the best information we possess regarding the then state of public opinion. The District Officer in India is admirably qualified to inform Government regarding the wants and wishes of all classes of natives, and to communicate to the latter the objects at which the Government measures aim.

My opponents will doubtless urge that 200 annual reports are more than the home Government can find time to read and digest. The remedy is obvious. District Officers must be taught Spartan brevity; but I protest against governors, secretaries, and precis writers being permitted to interfere with the text of reports which may save the British Empire in India from ruin. We all know how Sir A. Burne's despatches were tampered with, when it suited the English Government to produce a picture with rosy tints, and hundreds of thousands of lives might have been saved had the Government of Bengal acted on the information supplied by Mr. Herschel.

There is no fear of the encouragement of disaffection among natives by the publication of gloomy reports by District Officers. The latter are liable to be dismissed and ruined if they paint gloomily what they cannot prove.

If the Commander-in-Chief had attended to the reports of his subordinates, the Indian Mutiny might have been averted. If a Governor-General should neglect to read and profit by the warnings of his local agents, a rebellion may occur far exceeding in its horrors the events of the Mutiny.

Our danger in India arises from the dislike of Governors to probe political wounds, or to examine the inactive volcano.

I, therefore, urge that the placing of the reports of Deputy Commissioners and other Government local agents on the table of the House of Commons is a measure of far greater importance than the commission proposed by Mr. Fawcett, or than the collection of stale evidence now produced for the edification of the Committee on Indian Finance.—Your obedient servant,

THE MILITARY FUNDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I am a retired Bengal officer. During the first twenty years of my career a portion of my pay was deducted by Government for the purpose of subscription to the Bengal Military Fund, which Fund promised in return, in the event of my marrying, to provide for my widow, should I leave one, a competency. Ten years ago I married and left the service, and, of course, continued voluntarily to subscribe to the Fund in order to retain the contingent benefits, for the acquisition of which I had so long been an involuntary subscriber.

Well, Sir, I happened to open your last issue this morning at breakfast, and, skimming over its pages, my eyes caught these words, and I need hardly say, rested pretty steadily upon them:—"There was the Bengal Military Fund, which provided pensions for officers of the army. The capital of that Fund consisted at present of £473,000, and, taking the payments as at present, and the receipts as at present, there was an annual deficiency of about £74,000, which would exhaust the Fund in somewhat less than seven years."

I say my eyes rested pretty steadily upon these lines, for at first I thought my sight must be playing me false. But no. There they were in black and white, and the authority for the statement was, I found, Mr. Harrison, Secretary to Government in the Controller General's Department!

Now, Sir, having swallowed my first feelings of intense indignation and astonishment, let me ask you whether or not any Government guarantee exists which secures to officers the ultimate benefits for which they have been compelled to subscribe ever since the commencement of their respective careers; or whether, in the event of my dying seven years hence and leaving a widow, that widow is to be actually deprived of the pension on which she has so long reckoned, and which I could have purchased much cheaper for her from any insurance office?

This latter supposition seems too scandalously cruel to be likely to be true, but its denial by you may relieve the suspense of others besides my own.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

London, June 22nd. TOM NODDY.

THE COOPER'S HILL COLLEGE.

The Times of India remarks that after the candidates have passed the entering examination they will immediately be divided into four classes—1st, those who may come out direct; 2nd, 3rd, and 4th, those who must pass one, two, and three years respectively at the college. This will, we should say, seriously interfere with the successful internal working of the college, and it is tolerably evident that the limits of age for the first examination must be considerably altered. If the competition is a large one, and the examination a fair test of necessary acquirements, it is likely that so large a number of the successful candidates will be found qualified for direct appointments that the remainder will not be nearly sufficient to fill the college. This is just what we should look upon as most desirable, provided that the college scheme is then shelved until it be found that engineers of the right sort cannot be got without it. But we believe that no proof whatever has been given of this. It is needless to say that we do not believe in the college and its pupils being such a striking success as to raise the character and status of the whole engineering profession in England. We remember prophecies of the same sort when the Indian Civil Service competition was first instituted, and when a rush of senior wranglers and gold medallists was confidently expected. Whatever be the branch of the public service under consideration, we cannot expect to get the best men for India; it is well if we get fair average men, and the experience of the Indian medical competitions shows that it is by no means a matter of course that we shall get so much as that. At the same time, with regard to the scheme under discussion, we should be very sorry to think that no improvement in the department of Public Works is to be expected from the more general employment of regularly qualified civil engineers. The present system of employing a large number of Royal Engineer officers—of whom, whatever their abilities, it cannot be pretended that civil works are to them anything more than a pis aller in the absence of the military works and service for which they have been educated—and a small number of civil engineers picked up anywhere is one that it is not very difficult to improve on. Now, it seems to us that, if we can secure a number of passed civil engineers, men whose right to the C.E. after their names is undoubted according to the strictest rules of the profession, and who at the same time have had the ordinary education of gentlemen tested by the usual system of competition and marks, the Public Works Department may be considered very well off. It is well known that many persons who write C.E. after their names have no more right to do so than an officer of the Royal Engineers has by virtue of his having been employed on road-making.

THE COST OF LIVING IN INDIA.

The Pioneer declares that the expenses of living in India seem to be steadily on the increase—so, at least, most housekeepers say. Some, it is true, declare that if the prices of the necessaries of life, such as meat, fowl, grain, &c., have risen within the last few years, they are more than balanced by the reduction in beer, wine, and Europe stores, caused by the general introduction of railways, and the rapid and cheaper carriage via the Suez Canal from England. We doubt, however, if these assertions will stand investigation, and many old Indians say the value of money is not much more than half what it was twenty years ago; that is, a man with an income of Rs. 800 is no better off than he would have been on Rs. 500 before the mutiny. Many causes have combined to this end. It is a well-known fact connected with the native, that once the price of an article has risen from some unusual or accidental cause, it is seldom or never allowed to return to its original cost, even after the necessity for the rise in the price has long ceased to exist. In 1865, for instance, the price of gram in the Central Provinces was 25 seers to the rupee. Shortly after there was a famine, and the price rose to eight seers to the rupee. Gram has again become plentiful, but never again will thirty-five seers of gram be bought for one rupee in those parts. Many causes doubtless combine to keep up these prices—the railway for one; but the evil remains, and the consumer suffers. The cool way a native will graduate his prices according to the rank and pay of his customers is most amusing. Nubbee Bux, moorgheewallah, will sell a turkey to the wife of Lieutenant Brown of the 100th N.I. for Rs. 2-8, which he would not part with under Rs. 5 to Mrs. Jones, the colonel's lady. The price of horses also has increased considerably. Servants' wages are steadily on the rise; in fact, all the necessaries of life cost far more now than they did a few years ago. Does the diminished price of Europe stores and liquors compensate for this rise in the necessaries? It may do so in the case of the rich man, but certainly not in that of the man with the small income. Up to a certain point all Europeans of the upper class in India have much the same expenses. House-rent must be paid, and really there is not very much difference in the rates. An assistant magistrate or a captain, drawing some Rs. 450 a month, pays Rs. 80 or 100 for his bungalow, while the Judge of the High Court, on Rs. 4,000, pays Rs. 150. Servants also the poor man must have, and if his servants come to Rs. 100 while those of the rich amount to Rs. 200, the proportion is still immensely against the former. House-rent, servants, and bazaar expenses take, let us say, Rs. 300 out of Rs. 450, leaving a balance of Rs. 150 for all other expenses, while the higher income has a comparatively insignificant proportion deducted for necessaries. The poorer man cannot afford to buy much in the way of stores, therefore to him the reduction in their price is of little use; while on the other hand the richer man benefits by it to a really considerable extent, so that for him it probably covers the extra expense of his servants and bazaar. It is often a matter of discussion as to what rate should be charged for stores in excess of English prices. The experience of clubs and co-operative stores seems to show that forty per cent. on the English price will about cover all expenses of carriage, duty, agency, and breakage. But this gives no profit or interest on capital to tradesmen, so that even assuming them to procure their goods at trade price (i.e., at 10 to 20 per cent. below the public price), it is clear that much reduction in the present rate of stores is not to be looked for. It seems, then, that the only alternative open to the lower grades of covenanted officials is closer economy in consumption—a necessity which will not add to the attractions of life in India.

MEMORIAL OF THE TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

The Englishman entirely concurs in what the memorialists say regarding the severe nature of their work. Few people realise the amount of labour which the construction of a line of telegraph involves in a country like India, in many parts of which communication means are bad, if not altogether wanting, labour difficult to be obtained, and supplies scarce. The ordinary evil effects of exposure are, under such circumstances, much aggravated, and the telegraph claims annually its proportion of victims to combined hard work and exposure. The importance of giving the officers of the telegraph department every facility for going home to study is self-evident. The great political value of the telegraph in India, and the consequent necessity that it should be built upon the soundest scientific basis and officered by men well versed in the latest scientific and technical improvements, admit, we think, of no question. This would be a stronger argument in favour of the extension to the Telegraph Department of the furlough rules of the Covenanted Civil Service, if it were certain that all officers going home would avail themselves of the opportunity of being there, to increase their scientific knowledge. These are the special pleas put forward by the officers of the Telegraph Department, the other—and, we think, the strongest—arguments being those which we have so frequently urged in advocating the claims of the Uncovenanted Civil Service generally, to better furlough and leave rules—namely, the fact that Europeans have the same "home-ties," and are subject to the same "climatic influences" whether they be called Covenanted or Uncovenanted. On public grounds, too, we hope the memorial of the officers of the Telegraph Department will be favourably met by the Secretary of State. The reorganisation of the Department by Colonel Robinson, four years ago, was a most important experiment, and one which has hitherto proved a success, but which may, we fear, eventually become a failure unless the furlough and pension rules at present enjoyed by the officers of the Department are improved. Colonel Robinson saw the necessity of having in the Telegraph Department men who should not only be absolutely trustworthy—a matter of the first importance in a secret and confidential service of this kind—but who should also be so generally well educated and specially trained with reference to the work required of them in this country as to inspire the public with confidence and to place telegraphy in India upon a more thorough foundation than before. This was done by a combination of the nomination and competitive systems. Nominations were obtainable from the Secretary of State, who gave a preference to the sons or other relations of Indian officers, and the nominees were subjected to a general examination on the same subjects as those required for the Civil Service, this examination being intended to prove that the candidates had received a liberal education. Those of the candidates who passed this examination received from Government £100 wherewith to prosecute their studies for a year or eighteen months at a university and under a practical engineer. The subjects studied during this period were those which were particularly connected with the work which the candidates would have to do in this country, and they were examined on these subjects at the end of their study, the standard required at this final examination being higher than that expected in the first, and the examination being competitive, inasmuch as there were only a certain number of vacancies to be filled each year. We have mentioned these facts in support of our statement that unless better furlough and pension rules are granted to the officers of this service Colonel Robinson's experiment, which we consider a most praiseworthy and excellent one, is likely to prove a failure.

THE PROGRESS OF BURMAH.

Following the example of his predecessor in office, Major-General Fytche has made his retirement from the Chief Commissionership the occasion of a review of the administration of British Burmah during his tenure of office. The economical advantages of British over native rule have been nowhere so signally displayed as in this province; and though the rapidity of the progress achieved is no doubt attributable in a great measure to the vastness of the margin for improvement, there is not the remotest probability that it would have taken place under native rule. During the period between the occupation of Arracan and Tenasserim and that of the intermediate province of Pegu, the wealth and population of the former were nearly trebled, while those of the latter remained stagnant. After the annexation of Pegu, the united provinces started on a career of rapid progress, comparable only with that of our Australian colonies. During the ten years from 1855-56 to 1864-65 the population increased from 1,252,555 to 2,196,180; the trade from Rs. 4,94,64,085 to Rs. 10,36,81,154; and the revenue from Rs. 53,17,922 to Rs. 1,03,00,620 per annum. In 1869-70 the population was 2,463,484; the revenue Rs. 1,15,40,560; the trade Rs. 9,40,81,505. With regard to the apparent falling off in the trade, it should be remembered that the maximum of more than ten and a-half millions sterling was reached in 1868-9, and that 1869-70 was for many reasons an exceptional year. There is every reason to believe that 1870-71 will show a complete revival.

Major General Fytche's accounts of the state of political relations between British and Foreigh Burmah is naturally a somewhat couleur de rose one. Justly identifying himself with an undoubted advance in the foreign policy of the province, he is, we think, inclined to exaggerate the solid value of what has been actually effected. A treaty has certainly been concluded, providing for the utmost freedom as regards the commercial intercourse between the two countries; for the permanent residence of a political agent at the Court of Mandalay; for the establishment of a mixed Court to try cases between Burmese and British subjects, and for other objects of considerable importance. But so far there seems too much reason to fear that it is merely under sufferance and out of a capricious courtesy that we enjoy the privileges thus accorded us; and that we may any day be deprived of them, or compelled to adopt very strong measures to enforce them. It is, we think, still plainer that the retiring Chief Commissioner takes a very partial view of the success of the Bhamo expedition. However, we shall know more about these things by-and-by.

A curious anomaly in the administration of British Burmah is the absence of all direct relations of a diplomatic character between the local Government and the Court of Siam, whose territories are for a considerable distance conterminous with it. Intercourse between the British Government and this State is carried on entirely between her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and a British Consul residing at Bangkok.

It is, nevertheless, among the glories of General Fytche's official career that he settled the boundary between the two States, which had been in dispute for forty years.

Great and rapid as the progress made by British Burmah under our rule has been, there is a vastly greater future yet to be realised.

As yet the cultivated is little more than three per cent. of the cultivable land, and there is probably room for a population of sixty instead of two millions. A point, however, seems to have been reached beyond which further rapid progress is dependent upon our adopting a much more liberal and energetic public works policy than that hitherto pursued. In Arracan, which we have held for forty-five years, there is not a single completed road, and communications generally are in a most backward condition. Still more urgent, if possible, is the question of embankments. On the banks of the Irrawaddy alone, it is estimated that upwards of 3,000 square miles might be brought under cultivation if an adequate system of embankments were executed. The cost would be £339,000, the annual additional revenue £33,000, or nearly a hundred per cent. on the outlay. Yet financial difficulties are allowed to stand in the way. Here, indeed, would be a magnificent field for private enterprise if Government would encourage it by equitable conditions.

STATION TALK.

MYNPOORIE, May 17.—The most auspicious events of the week have been the opening of the new Government school building and distribution of prizes to the boys by his Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the N.W.P. His Honour arrived here on the evening of the 15th inst. at about eight P.M., and was received by the Rajah, the judge, the magistrate, and other gentlemen. The city was illuminated for the reception of his Honour, and the streets were crowded to witness his arrival. He passed by the new school building, the Tehsil and the Government dispensary, and he put up in the magistrate's bungalow for the night. The next morning a meeting was held in the new school building, where his Honour was received by the Rajah, the European officers and native gentlemen of the city. After taking his seat, the magistrate read a paper as to the erection of the new school building, as the old one was not roomy enough to give sufficient accommodation to the boys, who number sixty at present; that he had derived much assistance in the construction of the building from the rajah, subordinate judge, deputy collector and gentry of Mynpoorie. The Moonsiff read a similar paper, which expressed much gratitude to his Honour and the Magistrate for the encouragement given to so noble a purpose. The third paper was an address, both in English and Hindee, presented by the boys of the school to his Honour, and expressed their gratitude and joy for the means of improvement given them by the Government. His Honour then distributed the prizes to the boys. He thanked the Magistrate and others who were concerned in the erection of the building, remarking that the building was a remarkably roomy one, and well ventilated; he also gave encouragement to the people as to the education of their sons. He remarked that he regretted to find that the proportion of Mahomedan boys to that of Hindoos was remarkably small, and hoped that this state of things would not continue long. On his Honour resuming his seat, loud cheers followed. After the ceremony his Honour visited the new Tehsil and the Mission school, accompanied by the Judge, Magistrate and other gentlemen. His Honour left the station last evening at 5½ P.M. for Etah.

DUGSHAI, May 15.—There is talk here of great military doings next cold season. There will be a large camp at Meerut or Delhi, and reviews and sham-fights on a scale which is impracticable in England, in imitation of Prussian tactics. It would be a good thing for the British soldier if he could be kept entirely in the mountains till the beginning of the cold season, when he might go down to the plains and live in camp till the beginning of the hot season. Why should so many fine regiments be kept in the plains during the hot season in these days of railways and breech-loaders? One regiment armed with the Henry-Martini rifle, quartered at Agra or Cawnpore, might easily keep the whole of India in order now-a-days. I would back the 85th here to polish off the whole of Scindia's army in a few hours with their breech-loaders, always supposing Scindia has not got breech-loaders too. We are very healthy here, with the exception of some rather bad cases of erysipelas, which attacks the men of the 85th K.L.I. in a very sudden and unaccountable way. I hope I have spelt erisypelas right, but as I have no dictionary, and do not know the derivation of the word, I fear I have not. If it comes from sipalos (deformed), I suppose it ought to be spelt erysipalus. Anyhow, this complaint has been very bad in some cases, though not fatal. The patient's head and face suddenly swell to an immense size, and in some instances the sight has been nearly lost for ever. At Sanawur they have had a serious epidemic of measles, but it is passing away now. There have been six or seven fatal cases, owing to cold and inflammation of the lungs supervening. The Principal telegraphed at once to Government for a medical officer, as it was impossible for the civil surgeon of Kussowlie to be always at hand, and Dr. Smythe from Jullunder was immediately ordered to Sanawur. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab visited Sanawur last Tuesday, and minutely inspected every building, including the clean airy hospital buildings, when his Honour saw several cases of measles, which were progressing favourably. It is a question whether the fresh air system which is so strongly insisted on now-a-days is quite applicable to measles, and whether hospitals may not be a little too airy for a complaint which is so often followed by cold and inflammation, pace Miss Nightingale and the faculty generally; but I suppose if the hospitals were not so airy the deaths would have been attributed to insufficient ventilation, and the fault, if any, is on the right side. The Lieutenant-Governor, who was accompanied by Major Deedes and Mr. Lepel Griffin, seemed much pleased with everything and everybody, particularly with the girls, whom he heard sing, and for whom he has promised a handsome annual prize. Nothing could be brighter, healthier, and happier than the appearance of the girls, in spite of the measles; and nothing could exceed their neatness and cleanliness. Their education seems to be of a high order, to judge from their elegant handwriting and accurate spelling. The boys, too, looked well and jolly. I was sorry to see Mr. Cooke, inspector of schools, who was present, not looking very well, owing to an attack of sunstroke, which he got in March last when riding from Kalka to Simla. He has been commissioned to inquire into the case of Mr. Peake, the head master of the L. M. A., who is at present suspended from his duties for insubordination, the local committee having recommended his dismissal as most advantageous for the asylum and the maintenance of the principal's authority. The local committee might as well resign now, and leave the asylum and its principal to the tender mercies of the director of public instruction in the Punjab.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

TRAMWAYS.—Kumaon and other hill stations are likely soon to have "Stringer tramways" laid down along their roads and hill ascents. These tramways are worked by water power.

FLATTERING IF TRUE.—It is said that the people of Candahar and adjacent districts are thinking of asking to be allowed to settle in British territory, with a view to enjoying that peace and prosperity which, under successive rulers, they have been denied.

LITERARY.—Mr. Bate, a learned American Missionary of Allahabad, is preparing a Hindi dictionary which will contain no fewer than 37,000 words—twelve thousand more than are contained in the largest Hindi dictionary yet published. The newest work of the kind in Hindi is already a quarter of a century old (Thompson's, published in 1846), and has for many years been out of print.

HOSPITAL MUTTON.—Before the late financial difficulties the mutton supplied to European hospitals was always gram-fed; but with a lack of rupees came hard times to the sick soldier in the shape of tough mutton, yclept "grass fed." Anyone acquainted with the habits of sheep undergoing the above system of education can easily, says the Pioneer, picture to himself the deliciously tender and nutritive food supplied to men in hospital under this system. Many medical officers have reported the matter officially, and it is now under the consideration of Government.

TOO EARLY MARRIAGES.—At the close of the trial of a soldier named Calvert, at the Allahabad Criminal Sessions, for attempting to murder and for assaulting (on which latter count he was convicted) a young girl with whom he had been keeping company, Mr. Justice Turner spoke very strongly of the iniquitous custom too prevalent in regiments of allowing girls to marry while still of very tender years. In this particular case the young woman was hardly fourteen when marriage was planned for her. In the opinion of the learned judge such a custom enables the parents to make the marriageability of the girl a mere matter of traffic, and conduces to a great deal of immorality.

POLICE.—It is stated that Captain Birch, late Deputy Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, has resigned the Police Service and reverted to his regiment. Our readers may remember the circumstances under which he was removed from Calcutta. He appealed to the Governor-General in Council against the orders of the Bengal Government, and was successful, inasmuch as his Excellency in Council did not concur with the Lieutenant-Governor, Sir William Grey, in the conclusions arrived at by him, and requested his Honour to reconsider his decision. But Sir William positively refused to do so, and adhered to his own opinion. Captain Birch then applied to Mr. Campbell on his accession to Belvedere, but he has confirmed the orders of his predecessor.

DEATH FROM DROWNING.—A sad accident occurred at Jhelum on the evening of Monday, the 15th May, between six and seven o'clock, on the river. A small pleasure party in a boat, consisting of Mr. Moran, C.E., and Mrs. Moran, Lieut. Hare, R.E., and Mr. J. A. Crawford, Executive Engineer of the Rawul Pindee Extension of the Northern State Railway, were out for a sail, when the boat they were in drifted on to one very heavily laden with lime for the Jhelum bridge works. Mr. Crawford sprang to his feet and attempted to avoid a serious collision; but, missing his hold, he fell into the river, rising only once with both his hands uplifted. It is supposed that in his efforts to rise to the surface of the water his head struck against the bottom of the boat laden with lime, and that he was stunned by the concussion. He was a most excellent swimmer and a powerful young man. Lieutenant Hare deserves credit for the daring attempt he made to rescue the drowning man by fearlessly plunging into the torrent after him; but all his efforts proved unavailing, and he very nearly perished himself, as the river was swollen and very dangerous, with a strong current running at the rate of six to eight knots an hour. The deceased gentleman leaves a young widow and child. For the information we are indebted to our Lahore contemporary.

CIVIL.—It is believed that Mr. Hume will be succeeded as head of the Customs Department, North-Western Provinces, Central Provinces, and Oudh, by Mr. George Batten, C.S.

THE VEDAS.—We are informed that a number of native gentlemen in the neighbourhood of Serampore and Ooterpara propose to establish a Translation Club, for the translation of the Vedas and Puranas into colloquial Bengalee. They will raise subscriptions among themselves, and they propose to elect Mr. Plowden, Magistrate of Serampore, as their chairman, and to solicit the aid of Baboos Rajendro Lal Mitter, Ishur Chunder Bydasagur, and Denobundo Nyaratna, in revising and correcting the proof sheets. The Rev. J. Long and other gentlemen will be asked to become honorary members of the club. The members bind themselves to carry on the work for ten years. There is scattered through the Puranas a great deal of information relating to the domestic usages of Hindoos, notices of places, sects, &c. Professor Wilson translated the Vishnu Purana into English, and Professor Burnieuf gave a French translation of the Bhagavit Purana; but there are a dozen other Puranas that ought to be translated and commented on, and to these the club will direct its attention.

THE CACHAR RAIDS.—A letter to the Bengal Times from Chittagong, regarding the raids into Cachar, dated May 15, says:—"It is rumoured here that Winchester's little girl, Mary, who was captured by the Lushais in their late Cachar raids, is now with Sabunga, the Chief of the Syloo tribe, who is reported to have made a demand of Rs. 400 for her restoration. I have also heard it stated that Rutton Pooea has been negotiating the terms of her release from captivity. It is currently believed that the authorities here have issued orders for the little girl's ransom. This furnishes a slight clue of the identity of the raiders, of which I need not say those who should be the best informed are profoundly ignorant. It may be profitably investigated how the child came to be found in Sabunga's possession, by what means he discovered her abduction, and how it happens, unless friendly relations existed between himself and the actual abductors, any negotiation could have been maintained between them. Furthermore, inquiry may be set on foot to ascertain how Syloos could have become possessed of the plates, forks, and spoons they exposed for sale at the Kassalong Bazaar, as I informed you they did some time ago. You may remember that I acquainted you with their reply on interrogation—the articles had been procured, they said, from Sookpilal's people—a most improbable story, if we believe that worthy Chief, who declared that he was at feud with the Syloos when the British-manufactured articles were said to have been received from his followers. Subsequent identification in Calcutta, by parties who seem to know the facts, has gone to show that the articles formed part of the plunder taken at Cachar. You will probably see Captain Lewin, our deputy commissioner, who has proceeded to Calcutta to suggest the best and most practical means for inflicting a condign punishment on the Cachar raiders for their bold daring. Captain Lewin is expected to return via Dacca."

CAPTAIN LOWNDES'S MISSION TO ZIMMAY.—The Chief of Zimmay, near the Salween, over whose country the Government of Siam exercised some degree of suzerainty, at the beginning of the year begged the Commissioner of Tenasserim to delegate an officer for the purpose of settling the points of an important case in which some Moulmein timber merchants were interested. As this request seemed to offer a favourable opportunity for making arrangements to put a stop to the numerous dacoities which so much interfere with trade on this border, the Government of India readily accorded sanction to the proposal. Captain Lowndes, District Superintendent of Police, who is well acquainted with the border, and with our dealings with Zimmay, was selected for the post. His instructions are to follow as nearly as possible the route of Captain McLeod and Dr. Richardson in 1836-37. He is to avoid all political questions, such as exist to the great detriment of the peace of the neighbourhood, between the Chief and his neighbours, the Chiefs of Eastern Karennee, and of the Shan States tributary to Burmah, confining himself to expressions of regret that the peace and security of the neighbourhood should be disturbed by such questions. Any disputes between British subjects and the people of Zimmay he is to aid the chief to settle in a conciliatory manner. And he is to collect all possible information regarding the trade, routes, towns, physical aspect of the country, population, and manners and customs of the people. He is to try to get some kind of a map of Zimmay, showing the forests and streams running from them by which timber is floated into the Salween and Toungeen rivers, as such a map would be of great assistance in the proper adjudication of any disputes as to timber which arise in the courts of Moulmein. The chief is also to be offered the services of an engineer for the purpose of removing the obstructions in the Houyneloongye river. The mission of Captain Lowndes is expected to last about two months; the result will doubtless be a valuable addition to the scanty information hitherto procured as to this tract.

THE RAJAH OF SATTARA.—The ex-Rajah of Sattara, who has been a State prisoner in Kurrachee for the last twelve years, has been allowed, with the approval of Government, to proceed to the Deccan.

THE YOUNG RAJAH OF MYSORE.—An extraordinary silly paragraph has been going the round of the press—on good authority too—with respect to the young Maharajah of Mysore. Poor little fellow, he was told one day that he must leave off school duties to "keep" the anniversary of his father's death, and he said, "All my work, then, for the month is to end in nothing; I shall be absent to-morrow, and so lose all my places in class." All this was very creditable to the poor little Maharajah's love for learning, but not much certainly to his natural affection. What on earth has Colonel Malleson been doing to produce such a specimen of a boy?—Friend of India.

DACOITY IN MADRAS.—On the night of the 23rd March last the house of one Vencatasiengar, Moonsiff of Puttipuram, in the Salem taluq, was attacked by a gang of about fifteen dacoits, who forced open the door and began to plunder. Though the noise made by the dacoits roused the whole village, yet no one ventured to act on the defensive, as the aggressors continued pelting the people with stones in all directions. The attack of the robbers would have been completely successful, had it not been for the courage displayed by one Strinivasa Iyengar, who ran to his house, loaded his gun (an old blunderbuss), and, coming up boldly to within a few yards of the robbers, fired at the one nearest to him. The dacoits then rushed off, but in their hurry and fright carried away only property worth Rs. 294 leaving untouched a much larger amount. Had Strinivasa Iyengar been backed up by the other villagers, there is no doubt that the dacoits would have been arrested. The credit, however, of repelling the robbers is entirely due to this one individual. As the Government consider it expedient to encourage the principle of self-defence among the people of this district, where dacoity is unfortunately so rife, and to recognise the bravery displayed on this occasion by Strinivasa Iyengar, they have presented him with a gold bangle valued at Rs. 100, with an appropriate Tamil inscription thereon.—Madras Mail.

RETURN EMIGRANTS FROM NATAL.—On the 10th of last month the ship Red Riding Hood arrived in the Madras Roads with return emigrants from Natal. She had on board when she cast anchor 384 souls, of whom two died before they were landed. Of the remaining 382, 156 were for Madras and 226 for Calcutta, including an infant born on the voyage. When the ship left Natal there were 387 souls on board. Four deaths and one birth occurred at sea. The officiating Protector of Emigrants went on board the vessel, and examined the coolies and the ship. The coolies were all unanimous in praise of the kindness of the captain and doctor, and seemed for the most part stout and in good health. The arrangements between decks for the sleeping accommodation of the coolies seemed good. The vessel was only chartered as far as Madras, but subsequently Captain Rowland having been appointed by the Madras Government, at the request of the Natal Government, to officiate as emigration agent, and having entered into a fresh charter-party with the captain to take the Bengal coolies on to Calcutta, the ship's articles were signed, and she sailed for Calcutta. Many of the Madras coolies were loud in their complaints of the manner in which they had been treated on the estates in Natal. They all complained that they had been told, before leaving Madras and after reaching Natal, that at the end of their ten years' service there, they would get £10 each on leaving to return to India, but had not received any money at all. Another general complaint was that they had not had proper rations of rice, as stipulated, while on the estates. The Government have called the attention of the Government of Natal to the complaints made by the coolies.—Madras Times, May 18.

STATION TALK.

KURRACHEE, May 16.—It is incorrect to say that Sind is fast falling in the estimation of its "old friends," because the prospects of its capital are not, at the present moment, particularly bright. Men who have, in times past, contributed by their energies and abilities towards every measure connected with the commercial and social advancement of the province, still take a deep interest in it, and avail themselves of every opportunity they can, regardless of time and trouble, to promote all objects intended to benefit its inhabitants. Lately there has been some correspondence between Mr. John Brunton and Colonel Lambert—both now in England—on matters relating to Sind, and among other things two important questions—one of a water supply and the other of a gas supply for Kurrachee—appear to have received their earnest consideration. On the first question Mr. Brunton, in a private letter, dated Westminster, March 18, writes as follows:—"Now that the principle of decentralisation has been established, and each province will have its Imperial grant, or local funds, under its own control, to be expended in improvements which may appear to its authorities the most important, will it not be practicable for a water and gas company to open negotiations with such authorities for the purpose of obtaining a concession which shall offer inducements to English capitalists? This inducement with respect to the Kurrachee water supply might be in the form of a concession with a guaranteed percentage as interest upon a certain fixed sum (being the estimated cost of the necessary works) for a limited number of years, the payment of interest not to commence until the sufficiency of the works and the supply were satisfactorily demonstrated. Or it might assume the form originally suggested by me in my report to the Kurrachee Municipality, viz., that, in consideration of a supply of twenty gallons per head per day to all persons now supplied by the Commissariat, the authorities should guarantee a payment to the Water Company for a certain limited term of years, a sum equivalent to the average cost to the commissariat for the last, say, ten years for the very inadequate supply of inferior water which they have been able to give. In any case it appears to me that imperial and local interests will be mixed up, but I should hardly think that they will of necessity clash. I hear that my brother's water supply scheme for Hydrabad city and cantonment has been sanctioned in its entirety. It would appear too bad if Hydrabad should get water before Kurrachee." Mr. Brunton's letter has been circulated among our municipal commissioners, but it is doubtful whether, under the existing state of things, they will be able to entertain any proposition which English capitalists might make to them to supply Kurrachee with water. Their secretary, Mr. Dallimore, has, it is reported, submitted to them a scheme of his own, which, if carried out, will, I am told, suit our requirements admirably, and at very little cost. With regard to the gas supply of Kurrachee, Mr. Brunton asks, as a preliminary step, a concession from the local municipality, either to himself or to him and Mr. Sampson S. Lloyd, of Lloyd's Banking Company, Birmingham, as joint concessionaires, for the exclusive right to erect works, lay pipes, and to supply gas within the municipal limits of this city at the same rates as the Bombay Municipality has granted to the Bombay Gas Company. The only other condition requested is that the municipality guarantee payment for a certain number of public street lights at the Bombay rate. The "up" and "down" passenger trains on the Sindh railway line were stopped last night, owing to the subsidence in several places of the Guggur diversion. There was a fall of rain, but it was by no means so great as we anticipated; in fact, it was very slight, though there was some thunder and a good deal of lightning. From the nature of the Guggur watercourse the "temporary way" is about twenty feet high, and acts as a bund, through which no water can pass, but a few heavy showers would soon demolish it. The agent (Captain Wood), accompanied by Mr. Newnham, the engineer, went out early this morning, and found that the damage sustained was of so trifling a nature that it was repaired without much trouble, and traffic was set free again in a few hours. The traffic assistant, Mr. David McNeill, has obtained six months' leave to proceed to Scotland by to-morrow's mail steamer. He has been connected with the Sindh Railway for the past eight or nine years, and the manner in which he has co-operated with the agent in the work of organisation on the line has been commented on favourably more than once by the local press. Speculation is rife as to who is likely to succeed him. It is whispered in some quarters that "a favourite from the Punjab" will be sent; but this is not the time to "take care of Dowbs."—Times of India Correspondent.

A SAD ACCIDENT.—We regret to relate a sad accident which happened yesterday to the infant daughter of Mr. William Martin, bandmaster H.M.'s 23rd Regt. N.I., through the carelessness of an ayah, who handed Mrs. Martin a bottle of liniment, from which she gave her child a dose, thinking it was a tonic mixture which the child had been taking. Dr. Boustead, of the 9th Regiment, and Dr. McDougall, of the 23rd Regiment, were in attendance, and did all in their power, but the fatal dose was too powerful. It is said as much as would have poisoned two men was taken by the infant. This should be a caution to parents never to allow their native servants to have anything to do with medicines, either to touch or administer them. The liniment was properly labelled in a conspicuous manner by the chemist that prepared it. An inquest was held, and the verdict returned was "accidental death."—Poona Observer, May 20.

EXPORTS OF COTTON FROM BOMBAY.—From a statement of cotton issued by the Officiating Commissioner of Customs and Reporter General, Bombay, we see that the cotton shipped from the port of Bombay to foreign external ports and foreign Indian ports, during the month of April last, amounted to 7,26,35,960 lbs. (1,85,294 bales), of the value of Rs. 1,89,87,604. Of the above 4,20,32,508 lbs., valued at Rs. 1,10,32,115, were shipped to Liverpool; 53,84,792 lbs., of the value of Rs., 13,45,078 to Falmouth; 1,56,800 lbs., valued at Rs. 40,500 to London; 80,32,584 lbs., of the value of Rs. 20,80,192, to Trieste; 8,64,360 lbs., valued at Rs. 2,22,525, to Marseilles; 19,29,872 lbs., of the value of Rs. 4,87,559, to Havre; 16,55,960 lbs., valued at Rs. 4,28,210, to Genoa; 37,75,688 lbs., of the value of Rs. 9,36,235, to Bremen; 22,50,528 lbs., valued at Rs. 6,11,425, to Venice; 7,05,600 lbs., of the value of Rs. 1,83,500, to Naples; 34,84,628 lbs., valued at Rs. 9,10,729, to Odessa; 23,09,608 lbs., of the value of Rs. 7,13,076, to Hong Kong; and 53,032 lbs., valued at Rs. 16,460, to Muccala.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

WARRANT OFFICERS.

Bombay Castle, May 23.—No. 380.—The Government of India have decided that all warrant officers who may have attained to the warrant grade since the date of their G.O. No. 207 of 1869, viz., Feb. 19, 1869, shall be required, when they next take leave out of India to declare whether they elect the furlough rules of 1868, or not. Those who became warrant officers subsequent to that date can obtain leave out of India only under those rules.

It is to be clearly understood that no warrant officer can, under any circumstances, obtain leave eastward of the Cape on Indian pay and allowances, as granted to commissioned officers, under the rules of 1796.

PENSIONS AND GRATUITIES.

May 19.—No. 613.—Police officers on pay not exceeding Rs. 20 a month, when discharged from the revised constabulary as physically unfit for further service, have hitherto been allowed pensions or gratuities from the police superannuation funds, under rules which were administered by local Governments without reference to the Government of India.

2. The Superannuation Funds having been abolished, and the invalid pensions and gratuities being now payable from the general revenues, it is necessary to define the mode in which orders shall be passed on claims for such pensions and gratuities under the rules in force on this head for the time being.

3. To prevent error or fraud in computing service, there shall be kept up in each police force, separately for each district, by its district superintendent of police, a service roll in English, in which shall be recorded for each man the date of his enrolment in the constabulary, his caste, tribe, village, age, height, and marks of identification at the time of enrolment; his rank, promotion, reduction, or other punishment; his absences on leave or without leave; breaks in his service; and every other incident in his service which may involve forfeiture of portions of his service, or affect the amount of his pension or gratuity.

4. The roll shall be checked by the vernacular roll and order book, and the punishment register, and every entry in it shall be signed by the district superintendent of police, and checked at the periodical inspections by his controlling officer.

5. From this roll all service statements shall be prepared, additional proofs being required and collected, however, in respect of any service under Government before enrolment in the constabulary, which the police officer may be entitled to reckon under any rule or special order of the Government of India.

6. Claims by police officers on Rs. 20 or less pay to pension or gratuity for merely the period of continuous and verified service in the civil constabulary in which they are serving at the time of application may, if admissible under the strict letter of the rules in force, be allowed by the inspector general of police. A list of all pensions or gratuities thus sanctioned, with requisite particulars for identifying the men discharged, should be furnished by the inspector general to the local accountant general; and the grants should also be reported to the Government of India in the usual quarterly statements of similar grants in other departments which are submitted by the local Governments.

7. When the service for which pension or gratuity is claimed includes time passed in grades ineligible to pension under the ordinary rules, or when there are breaks in the service, or when the amount claimed as pension or gratuity is larger than the strict letter of the rule permits, the application for pension or gratuity should be referred through the local Government for the orders of the Government of India.

8. Payment of pension and gratuity shall be made by the treasury officer of the district in which the payees reside, on their identification by the district superintendent of police, and special committees shall be assembled every five years for identifying the pensioners.

9. The preceding rules are applicable to police officers on pay not exceeding Rs. 20 a month; but to facilitate generally the disposal of claims to pension, the inspector general of police shall keep a record of the service of every officer, including every European officer, in the force, and shall verify the record annually in communication with the local accountant general.

Secretary to the Government of India.

PROVINCIAL BUDGET, NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES, 1871-2.

Resolution, No. 506A, dated Allahabad, April 29, 1871.

Read—

Financial Department Resolution, No. 3,334, dated Dec. 14.

Financial Department Letter, No. 1,466, dated March 10.

Financial Department Resolution, No. 1,859, dated March 20.

Report of the North-Western Provinces Budget Committee, dated April 11, 1871.

Budget Statement drawn up and submitted with the Report.

REMARKS.—The Provincial Budget Statement for 1871-2, being the first ever prepared for the North-Western Provinces, contains many items which have not before been regularly estimated for, and some even which have never before been either received or expended. Several of the new entries are estimated for on data that are imperfect and conjectural. Such are those for the cost of the village police, which is now under course of reorganisation, and for the income expected from the commutation of police jagheers, and from the local cess payable on maáfee holdings. The comparison, therefore, with the figures of previous years is necessarily defective, as the materials for making such a comparison are wanting. But this deficiency will be remedied and removed by the experience that will be gained in future years, and the system of account that will be introduced.

On the other hand, as regards the departments formerly Imperial and now transferred to provincial services, the Budget Committee have had full materials for scrutinising the estimates, and the Lieutenant-governor is glad to find that in none of these has it been found necessary to sanction any sensible increase of charges. Several items of increase have been caused by the orders of the Government of India having general application to the whole country and not to this province in particular, such as the order raising the pay of the native doctors, the establishment of another lunatic asylum, the appointment of clerks for preparing the mortuary returns, &c. There is also a considerable increase in charges for official postage in all departments. A special grant has been made to meet this, which appears to be insufficient, and a further representation to the Supreme Government will probably be necessary. To balance these increases, retrenchments have been made wherever they were found to be practicable, and the improvement in agricultural prospects has been taken into consideration. Thus, upon the whole, as shown below, the estimates of the Civil Department for 1871-2 hardly exceed (in spite of the increases mentioned above) the Budget Estimates of 1870-71, which formed the basis of the gross grants allotted by the Government of India to the North-Western Provinces; and the net loss upon them is, therefore, almost confined to the share each has to bear in the Imperial deficit of £46,030 imposed upon the province.

Department.	Net Estimate for 1871-2, Deducting Receipts.	Net Grant from India, not Deducting Share of Deficit.	More.	Less.

Public Works ...	238,034	186,851	51,183
Total	£736,802	£680,782	£56,020

N.B.—The figures here shown differ considerably from those in the Budget statement, since in some departments, as Police, Education, and Public Works, only what formerly was Imperial is entered here; in the Budget statement the whole receipts and charges, formerly Local as well as formerly Imperial, are shown.

The case of the Public Works Department is, however, entirely different. As explained by the Lieutenant-governor in his place in the sitting of the Legislative Council, held on April 6 last, there is a large deficiency in this grant, amounting to above £50,000, in addition to the share of the Imperial deficit; and this is met chiefly by savings from the local cess and the acreage cess.

There are two novel features in the year's taxation—(1) the extension of the local cess to those of the temporarily settled districts in which the period of settlement has expired; and (2) the imposition of the acreage cess in the permanently settled districts. The receipts from these taxes will be mainly applied to the local objects of Rural Police, Roads, and Education. Under Section 14 of Act XVIII. of 1871 (the North-Western Provinces Local Land Rates Act), local committees will be appointed, and the accounts of receipts and expenditure separately balanced in each district.

The Budget, as now balanced, shows a surplus of £17,468. The Lieutenant-governor looks confidently to officers in every department to use their best endeavours that the Budget appropriations may in no case be exceeded, but that, on the contrary, further economy may be practised wherever it is found to be possible. It must be remembered that all savings at the close of the year will be carried on to the credit of the province, and will form a fund which can be re-allotted in the ensuing year to meet the more pressing demands for improvement and increased efficiency.

ORDERS.—The proposals of the Budget Committee are sanctioned, and the Budget for 1871-2 is passed.

Allotments will be made to each department for the year 1871-2, according to the figures shown in column 5 of the Budget statement, and these will be distributed by heads of departments among the several districts, institutions, works, and so forth, as sanctioned in the Departmental Budgets.

Ordered, that this Resolution and the Budget statement of the North-Western Provinces be printed in the Government Gazette.

Ordered also, that copy be sent to the Accountant-general, and to all heads of departments.

C. A. ELLIOTT,
Officiating Secretary to Government, North-Western Provinces.

THE HARBOUR ENGINEER.

The following Letter, from the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce to the Secretary to the Madras Government, P.W.D., under date May 15, has appeared in the Madras papers:—

"On the 28th ult. I heard quite casually that Mr. Robertson, the harbour engineer, had taken his passage for Europe by the steamer expected here on the following day, and, at the Chamber's request, I communicated with him, and expressed some surprise at his having refrained from consulting this Chamber with reference to the proposed improvement of the Port of Madras, although it was mainly owing to the action that was taken by the Chamber in 1868 relative to the breakwater project that this Government were induced to appoint the Committee of Inquiry, and subsequently to crave for their report the favourable consideration of the Supreme Government. In reply, Mr. Robertson very courteously expressed a readiness to meet the Chamber at such hour and place on the 29th ult. as they might name; and, at the same time, he intimated that he had been unaware of the action that had been taken by the Chamber, or he would not have failed to have communicated with them.

"The Chamber, I am instructed to say, are at a loss to understand so complete a forgetfulness on the part of this Government not only of the active interest that the Chamber have shown in the schemes under consideration, but also of the very existence of a corporate body that represents the mercantile interests of this Presidency, and that it at all times is solicitous to afford the Government the aid of practical experience in disposing of questions of a commercial nature. The Chamber might reasonably have hoped that Mr. Robertson would, without any prompting from any quarter, have addressed himself to the Chamber immediately on his arrival in Madras; and that the Government would naturally have asked him whether or no he had consulted those who were chiefly interested in the improvement of the port, and would, on finding he had neglected to do so, have suggested that, on public and professional grounds, it was expedient that he should ascertain the opinions and wishes of the chief advocates of the very mission upon which he was engaged.

"In compliance with their invitation, Mr. Robertson met the Chamber on the 29th ult., and reiterated his statement as to his ignorance of the action that the Chamber had taken in promoting his mission. He was so good as to express a desire to obtain the views of the mercantile community, and he entered into some particulars regarding his tour round the Madras ports.

"The Chamber were surprised, however, to find that though on the eve of embarking for Europe, there to prepare his reports on the harbours and roadsteads of this Presidency, Mr. Robertson had not seen the voluminous printed memorandum of M. A. de Closets, recommending the construction of a closed harbour at Madras, nor the elaborate plan, on a large scale, illustrative of this scheme. I was, however, enabled to place him in possession of a copy of this very suggestive publication. I am sorry to have also to add that, judging from Mr. Robertson's remarks, the Chamber were forced to the conclusion that he had not yet studied the exhaustive report of the Breakwater Committee, with the aid of the local examination of the features of the roadstead described, and the arguments employed by that committee. The Chamber do not presume to say that an engineer of such experience as Mr. Robertson is stated to possess, is not qualified to offer a valuable opinion after a few days sojourn in Madras, upon the feasibility or otherwise of the various projects for its improvement; but, as mercantile men, habituated to the thorough scrutiny of schemes before hazarding capital on their execution, the want of information that Mr. Robertson admitted, and the intention that he showed to postpone his study of the Breakwater Committee's report until his arrival at home, seemed to the members of the Chamber opposed to the spirit of the instructions of the Government of India. The Chamber have looked in vain in those instructions for any indication of the desire of the Supreme Government that Mr. Robertson should draw up his reports not in India, but in Europe; and they venture to think that in placing himself at a distance from the ports whose advantages and disadvantages it is his duty to describe, Mr. Robertson has deprived himself of the best precautions against hasty generalisation and shrewd conclusion from false premises.

"The conditions of nature in the East cannot be grasped in what Mr. Robertson has aptly termed in a letter of his to this Government, 'almost a pleasure tour,' by one whose life has been spent in Europe; and this assertion applies with particular force to the littoral currents, the fluvial freshets and deltas of India. A rapid tour round our coast, the accumulation of a few statistics, and contact for a few hours with those who presumably are best acquainted with the peculiarities of our ports, can hardly result in the production of a report upon which the Government could take action. The thorough knowledge of ports like Mangalore, Cochin, Tuticorin, Cocanada, and Madras, cannot be obtained but by patient investigation on the spot at various seasons. Mr. Robertson may have acquired a fair knowledge of the ports of our Presidency during the fair-weather season; but it was not in connection with that season that he was sent out to India; it was, unless the Chamber gravely misread the published papers on the subject, primarily with a view to offer advice as to the provision of safeguards for shipping in the foul-weather season that the Supreme Government decided upon urging the Secretary of State to authorise the mission to which Mr. Robertson was appointed. Beyond, then, such general, second-hand information as Mr. Robertson possesses in common with every marine engineer who has access to Indian Government records, he is returning to Europe to prepare his reports without having acquired by personal observation any extensive knowledge of the special dangers of wind and weather for which it is expected he will suggest a suitable remedy in this and other ports. The Chamber fear, then, that his reports will not have that weight with the mercantile community that the Government will probably desire fo them."

INDIAN APPEAL CASES.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council met on June 16, and heard Indian appeals.

(Present—The LORDS JUSTICES, Sir J. COLVILE, Sir J. NAPIER, and Sir L. PEEL.)

The first appeal from the Presidency of Bengal was "Ranee Khojoorooniss v. Rajah Syed Ahmed Reza"—in which Messrs. Henderson were for the appellant, and Mr. T. L. Wilson for the respondent. There was a cross appeal, and both were dated in the year 1864—seven years pending.

The counsel in this case were Sir Roundell Palmer, Mr. Field, Q.C., Mr. Leith, Mr. Doyne, and Mr. J. D. Bell.

Mr. Field applied for a postponement, as the next case, connected with the one called, had only been noticed a short time.

Their Lordships intimated that they could not allow an adjournment.

Lord Justice James: You know what the state of business is before the Court. There is an immense number of suitors complaining bitterly of delay. We must go on.

The case then proceeded.

The Committee met again on the 17th inst.

RANEE KHOJOOROONISSA V. SYUD AHMED REZA.

This case, which was commenced on Friday, was resumed at the sitting of the Court. There were cross-appeals, and some hours were occupied in the matter.

Lord Justice James gave judgment. Their lordships dismissed the appeals, and decreed that each side should pay their own costs.

BABOO PULHWUN SING V. MUHESHUR BUX SING.

This appeal from Bengal involved a boundary question as to land. It had been pending a long time.

Mr. Field, Q.C., and Mr. Leith (instructed by Mr. Luxmore Wilson) appeared for the appellant; Sir Roundell Palmer, Q.C., Mr. Doyne, and Mr. Pontifex (instructed by Messrs. Burton) were for the respondents.

At the sitting of the 19th inst. the list presented an unprecedented appearance, containing twenty-two petitions, besides one motion, and an appeal partly heard on the 17th inst. Several of the applications were both for leave to appeal and also to dismiss appeals.

At the sitting of June 20th the case Baboo Pulhwun Sing v. Mahaishur Buksh Sing, which commenced on the 17th inst., was resumed and adjourned.

At the sitting of June 21st the case Baboo Pulhwun Sing v. Mahaishur Buksh Sing was further heard. Sir Roundell Palmer was heard on the part of the respondent. Adjourned.

BABOO BHUNGWUN DOSS V. HUNOOMANPERSHAD SAHOS AND OTHERS.

At the sitting of June 23rd the cause Baboo Bhungwun Doss v. Hunoomanpershad Sahos and others was heard. This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Fort William, in Bengal. It had been pending since the 5th July, 1864. The question arose on a bond, and the point was whether it had been forged or altered. The document was not produced. Their Lordships ordered the production of the bond, and adjourned the case until after Michaelmas Term, when it would take its turn, and not be delayed until the long list of appeals should be heard.

RANEE S. SOONDREE V. KOOR P. NAREN.

This was an appeal pending since the year 1863, and related to some land. There were two decisions of the Courts in India in favour of the respondent. (Case proceeding.)

SINDH, PUNJAB, AND DELHI RAILWAY.

The half-yearly general meeting of this company was held on Thursday, at the London Tavern; Mr. W. P. Andrew in the chair.

The report, an abstract of which appeared in our last, was taken as read.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said that if they had not made the progress some had desired, the directors had done their best to secure the interests of the shareholders. The best proof of that was that his old and esteemed friend Sir Donald M'Leod, late Governor of the Punjab, had joined the board. Their agent in the Punjab, Major-General Abbott, and their agent in Sindh, Captain Wood, had done everything to merit the entire approval of the board of directors, and also of the authorities on the spot. On the last occasion he had perhaps said too much with regard to the delay that had occurred in respect of the "missing link" in their system, but to the delay it appeared was to be added a change of gauge, in reference to which nothing could be more injurious. The evil effects in England of the change of gauge introduced by the Great Western Company were well known, and the directors had been for some time past engaged in bringing about the alteration of the broad gauge on certain of the lines to the narrow gauge. Eminent engineers had stated that the result of introducing the broad as well as the narrow gauge in England ought to deter any Government from introducing a diversity of gauge in any country. With regard to the State lines through Sindh and the Punjab, Lord Napier's Minute of the 7th of July, 1870, demanded serious attention. Looking at the question of railways as a soldier, the Commander-in-Chief argued strongly in favour of continuing the Indian broad-gauge system from Kotree to Peshawur, as soon as possible. Others besides himself would certainly be surprised to find the completion of the railway to Peshawur put down in a financial scheme for the year 1885, and the completion of the Indus Valley line for the year 1890. If any lines called for early completion it was those two, which would bring the Punjab into swift communication with Bombay and Kurrachee, and guard the north-western and western frontiers from the worst dangers of any sudden attack. The state of trade last year had greatly crippled the traffic on the railway in the Punjab, and so had the recent war in France. The receipts for the first fourteen weeks of the present year had shown a great revival; they amounted to £126,505, averaging £9,036 per week. The opening of the bridge over the Sutlej had not had time enough to show a saving and economy in working expenses, but every effort was being made to reduce working expenses. The progress of the works in the harbour of Kurrachee going on so slowly had caused great anxiety. It was to be regretted that harbour works which could be completed in five years had already taken fifteen years to carry them on by the Government. (Hear, hear.)

Sir D. M'Leod, deputy-chairman, seconded the motion for the adoption of the report. He said that for the last fifteen years he had been a close observer of the works and working of the Punjab Railway. He believed the Punjab was capable of great development by means of irrigation works. The railway along the Indus Valley was considered in the Punjab of vital importance to the undertaking. Every one hoped that the scheme for a break of gauge would not be carried out.

After some observations by Mr. Bidder on the injurious effect of a break of gauge, and by Mr. Minton on the accounts, resolutions were passed adopting the report, re-electing the retiring directors and also the retiring auditor.

LONDON ASSOCIATION FOR SOCIAL PROGRESS IN INDIA.

The second lecture under the auspices of this Association was delivered on Friday evening, at the Rooms of the Social Science Association, by Dr. Ghose, of Calcutta, on "Female Education in Bengal." The room was filled by an audience of about seventy persons, among whom were Dr. Underhill (Chairman), the Rev. T. Fremantle, Mr. and Mrs. Hickson, Miss Winkworth, Miss Holland, Mr. W. Akroyd, Mrs. Tetlow, and Madame Ronniger, &c.; Messrs. I. Prichard, K. M. Chatterjee, J. J. Casie Chitty, G. Sen., L. Ghose — Banerjee, R. Roy, K. Gupta, Kapadia, S. S. Tayler, A. Toulmin-smith, W. Shaen, J. C. A. Scott, Rev. R. Miller, Rev. T. Hunter, &c.

Dr. GHOSE commenced by saying his experience was limited to Bengal only. He said the pernicious system of caste, ignorance, and priestcraft had induced female subjection from a remote period, though it was not so in the earlier age of India. In ancient and mediæval times Indian women had an honourable position both by law and society. (He quoted a passage from early poetry in illustration of this thesis.) Ancient India recognised the equality of the sexes—caste was nowhere mentioned. He then sketched the system of caste, and said the ignorant priest took advantage of the softness of the female heart to cut them off from all knowledge. There arose a gulf between the two sexes, and the system of seclusion for women, which was further deepened by the Mahometan invasion. Literature was discouraged by the priests, and the study of the Vedas by any but a Brahmin was declared sinful. Numberless castes arose corresponding to all trades and occupations. Southern India kept the liberty of women more or less intact, because it was less reached by the Mahometan invasion. Dr. Ghose then dwelled the recent history of education in India. At the close of last century two missionaries, named Carey and Marshman, opened a school at Serampore. Proselytism being their object, the school failed. At the dawn of this century two large-hearted men, Rammohun Roy and David Hare, took up the work. Rammohun Roy revived the study of ancient literature, preached monotheism, and founded the Brahmo Somaj. Hare established a secular school and collegemanaged partly by leading Hindoos, to which the most respectable natives in Calcutta sent their children. Captain Richardson was Professor there, and taught English literature. Passing specially to female education, the lecturer said that Mr. May first opened a girls' school at Chinsurah, in 1818. A lady, Miss Cooke, came to Calcutta in 1821 to aid the work. In 1824 there were twelve four schools and 600 pupils. A central school was opened in 1828. These attracted the lower classes only. Baptist missionaries followed. Mr. Drinkwater Bethune, with his cosmopolitan views, theorised the Bengalee mind to female education. A school was opened in 1849, in a splendid house built for the purpose. A rich landholder then proposed an experimental school in his town, offering an endowment of land, if Government would give an equal value. The offer was declined. It was not till a set of youths came forward, embued with moral enthusiasm, among whom was Keshub Chunder Sen, that much was done. He founded a mutual improvement society and evening school. In almost every town a few young Brahmos joined and kept up a debating society, a female school, and a school for boys. The agencies now at work are the public schools, the zenana education by a member of the family, and the zenana education by a visitor. The public schools have male and female teachers, chiefly converts. In 1861 there were 16 schools, 395 pupils; in 1866 there were 160 schools, 3,794 pupils; in 1870, 280 schools, 6,569 pupils. The average cost is twenty-two shillings a-year for each pupil; of this eight shillings was paid by Government. Early marriage renders female education abortive. There is a want of female teachers; for the infant mind, whether of boy or girl, thrives better under a lady's guidance. As to zenana education by lady-teachers, in 1866 there were 33 such teachers (missionaries), with 600 (now 1,387) pupils. This suits the Hindoo family system. The Biblical part of the education is useless, and raises a suspicion; the rest of it is poor. Hindoo ladies take rather to works of art, but what they really need is enlightenment. No education can be carried on while the seclusion lasts. We should arouse a burning curiosity in its inmates, and women must be convinced that there are brighter prospects without than within. But for the present the zenana teaching must supplement the public schools. He objected to the sort of education given in both. Reading and writing Bengalee is taught. But this is a mere means to an end. The question is, should English be taught. In India the Sanscrit, the original vernacular, is dead. There are now eight vernaculars. India must be united by a modern civilisation and a common language. Can English be that language? We ought to judge by utility, not by feeling. It is agreed that young men should be educated in English. He did not understand how a man who thinks with John Stuart Mill, and reads Milton and Shakespeare, can find a congenial companion in one who knows only Bengallee. It was asked—why should not the Western works be translated? But a literature cannot be formed only by translation. The educated Hindoos will write and express their thoughts in English. Government should establish Anglo Vernacular schools for girls as there are for boys. There should be friendship between the British and Indian races. The English do not yet understand how much the influence of Western ideas is dispelling feudalism. It is social friendship that the two countries should look to. English ladies can cultivate the friendship of our sisters at home. He could not too much emphasise the importance of English ladies visiting Indian ladies. They would soon count the "English-returned" Hindoos by scores. There will be young ladies coming over to this country by scores for education. A small committee should be formed of persons in whom the parents could have confidence. This committee should find homes and schools for them. There is a misconception, They think it would be a disaster if young ladies learnt the fashions of Europe. They think English civilisation is idleness and luxury. And there is an outcry by Anglo-Indians against the adoption by Hindoos of English customs. They said of the Indian Reform Association, it was "an attempt to let loose the full flood of English civilisation on a crude state of society." But we want a scientific civilisation. We want to liberate our women because the laws of nature demand it, because justice demands it, and not as mere matter of imitation. He then sketched the history of normal schools. The Indian Reform Association has a school with sixteen pupils, costing £18 a month. He then eulogised Miss Carpenter for her philanthropic exertions. He finished by saying the children of the elder stock of the Aryan race have come to the younger for help. India is awakening from the slumber of ages. You have apprised her of the rise of the sun of civilisation; she will yet have that sun over her own head. We ask you to water the plant which you have planted in our rich soil.

The meeting was afterwards addressed by the Rev. W. Fremantle, Mr. Prichard, Mr. Banerjee, and some others.

The Secretary announced that the next lecture would be delivered in about three weeks, by Mr. S. N. Banerjee.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The Parliamentary Committee sitting on the financial arrangements of the Indian Government resumed its inquiry on June 16, the Right Hon. A. S. Ayrton, M.P., in the chair. Mr. Grant Duff, the Under Secretary at the India-office, Mr. Fawcett, Sir Stafford Northcote, and Sir Charles Wingfield took leading parts in the examination of the day.

Mr. Stewart Reid, junior member of the Board of Revenue, North-West Provinces of Bengal, was examined on the land settlements of those provinces. The particulars he gave regarding them have been already given in the evidence of several witnesses, including that of Sir Robert Montgomery.

In advertence to the favourable opinions entertained of Sir Charles Wood's order by several eminent Indian statesmen, the committee considered that minutes should be obtained from them, recording their views on the working of the permanent settlement and the political justice of the measure.

Dr. Wilson, vice-president of the Bombay University, was next examined on the consumption of opium in the Native States and by the people of Western India. He had travelled over the greater part of Western India. The witness adverted to the growing taste of the people in the Western parts of India, and especially in Rajpootana and the Native States, for the consumption of the opium; a subject which had not been much attended to in the inquiry hitherto. The Mahommedans, forbidden ardent spirits by the Koran, made the use of opium a substitute. This had increased the cultivation considerably. The Mahommedans smoked it; it was eaten or chewed by the people of the Native States. The habit had become so bad as to prove inimical to the administrative purposes, and the rule of the native chiefs. Labourers and travelling artisans were the principal consumers, although it was also in growing favour with the upper classes, and he had once seen, while in Kattywar, a native prince carried about on a silver chair, the emaciated and worn-out victim of opium-eating or smoking. He believed the best means of checking its use would be the imposition of a license duty on the sale of the opium. The municipalities or corporate bodies of the different towns and villages should be consulted, according to Sir Donald McLeod's excellent recommendation, on the most suitable mode of dealing with the question, and what were the real wishes of the people.

The witness referred to a minute of the Bombay Government, which showed that some attention had been given to the consumption of opium and the excessive use of ardent spirits in Western India, and that an inquiry was pending. The doctor read passages from two works, showing the ancient as well as modern prevalence of drunkenness among Orientals, and the repressive laws of the Hindoo creed, the Buddhist sacred writings, and the Koran, against intoxication. The witness expressed his fears that in the Malwa territory a dreadful famine would arise from so much land being under cultivation for opium.

Sir Henry Anderson, of the Bengal Revenue Department, gave evidence regarding sources of revenue deprived from stamps of all kinds and law court fees, &c., amounting to £2,379,669. He first described the character of the documents stamped, which appeared to be similar to that of England in many respects. The uniform rate of 7½ per cent., going down to the minimum of 5 per cent, was obtained from litigators in the law courts, and on all legal documents. The Stamp Act of 1860 was now the law over all India; but the Act had been amended by the new Act of 1870, which had been too short a time in operation to enable him to judge of its working. The small suits in the Indian Courts contributed a large part of the litigation of the country. The ordinary stamps are from one anna to eight annas. As in the English system, the stamps rise in amount in accordance with the amounts involved in the deeds stamped. Another part of the legal revenue comes from Court fees. The present stamp laws were popular in India, except the Court fees, which were felt to be unnecessarily hard. The people of India were peculiarly addicted to litigation.

The committee resumed on Tuesday, when Sir Henry Anderson was recalled and examined on the stamp duties. Justice in India was entirely paid for by fees, and the Government did not provide for justice as is the case according to the polity of England. Barristers' fees were higher in India than here, and so are the legal fees generally.

Mr. Fawcett handed to the witness a letter on the subject of the stamp duties, which he had received from an eminent Calcutta barrister (Mr. Doyne), and informed witness that he could read any part of it to the committee that might bear on the evidence then being taken. The portions read referred to the incidence of Court fees. The evidence that followed bore upon the excess of appeal cases from the Indian Courts, which were made the subject of public scandal. An ordinary item of receipts for law and justice amounted to £801,954; the sums whence the total was derived were given seriatim. The due allocation of a considerable sum from registration of assurances (Bombay), which did not appear in its proper place in the general revenue accounts, took considerable time to investigate, and was left over for further inquiry. The actual amount of the item unexplained was a sum of £75,000 registration fees (Bombay), which was wanting to make up a minor total of £160,114, and that sum, it was expected, should come from the Bombay Presidency, but had not been inserted in their accounts.

The Committee had not, therefore, the means before them of drawing the balance between receipts and expenditure. The next important item of receipts was £130,380 from jails and convict labour. Its examination elicited some criminal statistics which may be briefly mentioned. The total number of prisoners in the Bengal jails in the last year for which there was any return (1869) was 74,721. The cost of the keep of prisoners was fifty-three rupees per head per annum in the Mofussil, and in Calcutta thirty-six rupees per head per annum. In the Bombay jails in the year 1869 there were 52,912 prisoners; cost of keep one hundred and two rupees per head per annum. In Madras jails the total number of prisoners in 1869 was 74,321; cost, seventy to seventy-one rupees per head per annum. The prison philanthropist who had done most to ameliorate the prison system in India, and also to produce revenue from prison reform, was Dr. Mouat, under whose management the health and morals of the prisoners had been duly cared for, and their industrial capacities practically rendered the prison self-supporting to a certain extent. The labour of the convicts at Port Blair, Andaman Island, produced to revenue a small annual sum.

The witness underwent a cross-examination from Mr. Fawcett, based upon the irregular modes of keeping accounts observable in the different Presidential Governments; but no proof of malversation, such as it seemed the aim of the examination to elicit, were produced.

Returning to prison discipline, the witness said: Dr. Mouat had recently introduced into the prison jute-mills and oil-mills for the application of harder labour. The convicts' labour was made very productive by the introduction of these mills. The prisoners also manufactured carpets, towelling, &c. There was a printing-press in Allipore Jail, where all Government forms were printed. In answer to Sir T. Besley, the witness said that, as respected Allipore Jal, there had been an inquiry in consequence of a charge of collusion between two persons interested in the Government printing, and who tried to monopolise it in a very discreditable manner.

The next leading subject taken up by the committee was receipts from the Post-office: gross amount, £711,198. Not to go over each item, it will suffice to merely allude to those that were challenged; and among the few so challenged was the contract for the carrying of the mails entered into with the Peninsular and Oriental Company. The Imperial Government, in conjunction with the Government of India, had paid the amount of £400,000 per annum for carrying the mails outward and inward. The new contract of last year increased the payment to £450,000 per annum, the contract to last till the year 1880. There was a deficit on Post-office revenue through the cost of the mails. The net loss to the Imperial Government was £131,000.

Some facts were adduced showing the rapid improvement of the inland postal system and money-order system of India. It appears there is no revenue from postal service in India at present, but it promises to be productive. The next item was gross receipts of revenue received, from municipalities, &c., for police, £287,549. The system was this, that in plain terms the Government "farmed" the municipal police. Sir George Clerk's mode of embodying the police for the Bombay Presidency was the one that now existed in every presidency and province in India. There is a mixture of military with ordinary civil police, and the Khandeish Bheel Corps were an illustration of an admirable police force for military purposes. The educational receipts of revenue were next taken. Total for edution £74,889, derived from fees and scholars, fines, &c. There is an extra assessment or education duty of one anna on every assessment of one rupee, to support the education of the people. It was again complained of in the committee that some of the accounts or items produced explained the nature of the revenue so imperfectly not to be relied upon. As regarded the state of education generally, it was in a satisfactory state. The Government schools were popular.

The Committee resumed on Friday, when Mr. Andrew Assels, Bombay merchant, was called and examined on the Indian tariff. He advocated the commercial policy of the abolition of all export and import duties, thus throwing open the external and internal trade of India. He proposed to make up for loss of customs revenue by increasing the land tax.

Mr. W. Maitland, Calcutta merchant, late chairman of the Bank of Bengal, was next called, and gave evidence on the opium traffic. He advised the appointment by the Government of a commission of inquiry, to be composed of commercial men acquainted with the opium trade, to visit those parts of China where the indigenous opium was grown, and examine on the spot into the quality of the native product. The same commission might be empowered to consult with the Chinese authorities on the most equitable means of settling the vexed question of the opium traffic and native competition with it. He recommended this course, induced so to do by his own personal experience of the opium traffic as a merchant who had visited China and was acquainted with the agricultural trade of the country. Besides the opium traffic he objected to another anomaly in the Indian tariff, viz., the rice duty, which was a heavy an impost; it was 10s. per ton; which prevented India from getting rice from China and Japan, and Siam, where the rice would be had in abundance and at an almost nominal price.

Miscellaneous.

NEW GOVERNOR OF LABUAN.—The Queen has appointed Henry Earnest Bulwer, Esq., C.M.G., to be Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Island of Labuan and its dependencies.

NEW DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FOR INDIA.—The Gazette publishes a resolution of the Government regarding the immediate establishment of a Department of Agriculture, and appointing Mr. Hume secretary.

DEATH OF COLONEL HALY.—The death is announced of Colonel George T. Haly, of Shepherd's-bush. Colonel Haly was a son of the late Sir George Haly, Governor of Newfoundland. He had written several valuable pamphlets on the condition and resources of our empire in the East.

NEW COFFEE COMPANY.—A prospectus has appeared of the Beechlands Coffee Estates Company, which is formed for the purpose of working a property in the district of Coorg, in the East Indies. The capital is to be £75,000, half of which is to comprise the first issue in shares of £10 each.

THE MESSAGERIES MARITIMES COMPANY.—M. Rampont, the Director-General of the French Post-office, announces that the service of the maritime postal lines to India, China, and Japan has been conceded to the Messageries Maritimes Company. The service will be reopened on the usual conditions next July, and a mail will leave Marseilles every other Sunday at three A.M.

ASSAM COMPANY.—The directors of the Assam Company have issued their report for the past year. The receipts for that period were £120,137. 6s. 8d., and the total expenditure £76,795. 0s. 7d., leaving £43,342. 6s. 1d. as profit. Out of this an interim dividend of 5 per cent. was paid, and it is now proposed to declare a further dividend of 10 per cent., making together 15 per cent. for the year.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £400,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 21st inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £350,000, and to Bombay, £50,000. The minimum price was fixed, as before, at 1s. 10½d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10¾d. will receive about 31 per cent., and on Bombay at that price in full.

ORIENTAL LITERATURE.—Professor Lethbridge has urged the advisability of publishing the records of the old Dutch settlement of Chinsurah, as a contribution towards the local history of India. A new work will soon appear, called "Eastern Sketches by an Indian Functionary." We believe the functionary is Mr. Lewin B. Bowring, C.S.I., the private secretary of Lord Canning, and for some years the Principal Commissioner of Mysore and Coorg.

LOCAL DEPOTS.—We hear that arrangements for the formation of the new local depots are still under consideration, though no determination has yet been arrived at. It is more than probable that the success of Mr. Torrens's motion for an Address to the Crown against the embarkation for foreign service of soldiers under the age of twenty will cause the Government to reconsider the question, as general recruiting depots will probably be indispensable under the new regulation.—Broad Arrow.

EXPORT OF BULLION.—The following exports of bullion to India and China are the latest extracted from De Quetteville's Indian Circular:—By the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, per Massilia, June 10, from Southampton—gold, to Bombay, £2,200, Ceylon, £185, Madras, £1,094; silver, to Penang, £7,300, Singapore, £36,400, Hong Kong, £28,000, Shanghai, £6,760; per Poonah, June 17th, from Southampton to Alexandria, £35,000, Bombay, £2,400. By the steamers of the Messageries Imperiales, per Ava, June 11, from Marseilles—gold, Aden, £2,000, Reunion, £1,616, Madras, £700; silver, to Reunion, £2,480, Madras, £192. The price of silver is quoted as bar 5s. 0¾d. per oz. standard, dollars 5s. per oz., 5 francs 4s. 11½d. per oz.

EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION.—The annual general meeting of the East India Association was held at their rooms, 20, Great George-street, Westminster, on Wednesday, the 21st inst., at three o'clock. The Right Hon. Lord Lyveden, P.C., President of the Association, took the chair. Colonel Sykes, M.P.; E. B. Eastwick, Esq., M.P.; Sir G. Le Grand Jacob, Sir Henry Ricketts, Major-general Sir Vincent Eyre, W. S. Fitzwilliam, Esq., and other gentlemen were present. After a few remarks from Sir Henry Ricketts, Colonel Sykes, and the noble chairman, the annual report was adopted and agreed to by the meeting nem. con., after which the election of president, vice-presidents, and council for the ensuing year took place, the Lord Lyveden being again re-elected as president. Votes of thanks to the president, vice-presidents, council, and the hon. secretary (Dadabhai Naoroji, Esq., at present in India), closed the proceedings.

TRIAL TRIP OF A NEW STEAMER.—The S.S Calcutta, of 2,100 tons gross register, 3,000 tons burthen, and 1,200-horse power, being the first of a large and improved class of vessel of the Norwood Red Cross Line via the Suez Canal to India, went her trial trip from Blackwall to the Nore and back on the 20th of June. A large and influential company of gentlemen (numbering about eighty) were invited for the trip, and the very excellent and liberal arrangements on board appeared to give entire satisfaction. The Indian travelling public will be glad to learn that in the Calcutta they will find a steamer well adapted to their wants, the arrangement of the cabins, ventilation, and other matters on board having been carefully attended to. The Calcutta is to sail about the 27th of June, and, as she goes direct to Calcutta, may be looked for there about the end of July. We understand that the Calcutta is to be followed by others of a similar construction, the Agra having been launched a few days since, and will leave London for India about July 15, to be followed by the S.S Scindia about September 1, and the S.S. Golconda about October. 1.

BRITISH-INDIAN SUBMARINE TELEGRAPH COMPANY (LIMITED).—An extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders was held on June 21, at the Cannon-street Hotel; the chair was occupied by Mr. John Pender. The accounts showed that the gross receipts of the company for the six months ending 31st of March, less £1,086. 5s. 6d. loss on remittances from India, amounted to £42,644. 15s. 9d., and the expenses, including income-tax, to £17,316. 4s. 8d., leaving a balance of £25,328. 11s. 1d. available for distribution amongst the shareholders. The directors, under the provisions of the 160th article, had declared a dividend on account, for the half-year, of 4s. per share, absorbing £23,750; leaving £1,578. 11s. 1d. to be carried forward to next account. The receipts for the month of April and May amounted to £71,797. 6s. 6d., being at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, after deducting working expenses. The chairman said that the present meeting had been called in compliance with the wish expressed at the last meeting that the company should hold half-yearly meetings. No doubt many shareholders would be disappointed with the dividend, but it must be borne in mind that the circumstances attending the last half-year's working had been exceptional. The Falmouth and Gibraltar line was broken down for three months, and the war on the Continent prevented this company working either by way of Marseilles or by Italy with Malta, consequently the accounts really represented a quarter of a year's working instead of a half-year's working. When the cable was restored, it took a considerable time to regain the traffic, but he was happy to say that it was now rapidly coming back. Since the last meeting the British-Indian Extension line had been opened, and promised to be remunerative; and the China line had been opened within the last few days with encouraging prospects, and of course this company would derive additional traffic from the opening of those two lines. It was hoped that the Australian line would be opened before the end of the year, which would also improve this company's traffic. The question of the amalgamation of the different companies had been before the directors, and the directors considered it was advisable to carry it out when the proper time arrived for so doing. (Cheers.) In conclusion, the Chairman formally moved the adoption of the report. The resolution for the adoption of the report and accounts was then put to the meeting, and carried, which closed the proceedings.

EUPHRATES VALLEY RAILWAY.—The following letter has been addressed to the editor of the Times:—"London, June 21.—Sir,—As I observe the proposed Euphrates Valley Railway is to be brought to the notice of Parliament on the 23rd inst., I would ask the favour of being allowed to invite public attention, through your medium, to a brief summary of the advantages which would be secured to the British Empire by the establishment of a railway between the Mediterranean Sea and the head of the Persian Gulf. Making Kurrachee the point of arrival and departure, the Euphrates Railway would shorten the journey between England and India by more than 1,000 miles. It would provide us with an alternative route, and that the shortest and most direct, between England and all our Eastern possessions, Ceylon and Australia as well as India. It would enable troops from England to be landed at Kurrachee in about fourteen days, and when the Indus Valley Railway system is completed, in two or three days more at Lahore, Peshawur, and Delhi. It would subject an enemy advancing towards the North-western frontier of India to easy attack in the flank and rear. It would render the resources of England so promptly available in Asia that Chatham and Portsmouth might be made the bases of operations as easily as Kurrachee and Bombay can be now. It would thus render the invasion of India practically impossible, and would give England the first strategic position in the world. The railway itself would be easily defensible by England, both of its termini being on the open sea. Commercially the undertaking would not be less important to this country. It would open up new countries and develop new branches of industry, of which England would reap the chief benefit. It would afford to Persia a short, cheap, and easy outlet on the Mediterranean for her trade with Europe, in place of the existing long, expensive, and difficult route by the Black Sea, which is entirely at the mercy of Russia. It would secure for this country almost a monopoly of the Persian trade, at present enjoyed by Russia, and it would afford a powerful stimulus to our trade with the vast territories contiguous to our frontier in the North-west of India. In an engineering point of view the undertaking is eminently practicable. The country from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf was explored by General Chesney in 1836, and the only difficult portion of the route surveyed by Sir John Mac-Neill and an engineering staff in 1856, and it has been ascertained to be well adapted for a railway. The cost, it is believed, would not exceed £10,000 a mile or £8,500,000 for the whole distance of 850 miles; or, if a narrow gauge and light rail were adopted, a considerably smaller sum would probably suffice.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, W. P. ANDREW."

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, June 19.—PROPER AGE FOR ARMY RECRUITS.—In Committee on the Army Regulation Bill, Colonel Anson, Lord G. Hamilton, and Lord Elcho, who had amendments on the paper, made way for Mr. M'CULLAGH TORRENS'S new clause, providing that no person hereafter enlisted as a soldier in any regiment of cavalry or infantry of the Line shall be called upon to serve her Majesty out of the United Kingdom until he shall have attained the age of twenty years.—Remarking that the chief consideration held out to Parliament and the country to secure the transfer of powers and increased supplies asked for by the Government was the creation of a more effective army, he went on to show that the quality of our army must, in great degree, depend on the physical strength of the men composing it. He then quoted from the Duke of Wellington, Lord Hardinge, Lord Raglan, Sir J. Burgoyne, and other military authorities to prove the inefficiency of soldiers under twenty years of age. Dr. Lyons, who reported to Government on the diseases of the army in the Crimean camp, wrote:—"The immature youths of eighteen to twenty succumbed at once to the hardship of campaigning, or perished after operations performed for wounds. When examined after death the ends of the long bones of the legs and arms still showed the cartilaginous state, being incompletely knit." In carrying out the clause he now submitted, the War-office could either adopt the system of home battalions for youths under twenty, recommended by Sir J. Burgoyne and Lord Sandhurst, or invent some scheme of its own.—Mr. HOLMS, in seconding the resolution, suggested that each regiment should consist of three battalions, one of which should be composed of six years' service men, and should be available for service in India and the Colonies; and the other two of three years' service men, which should be available for home service. The officers and non-commissioned officers of these battalions should be interchangeable. No recruits under nineteen years of age should be enlisted. The pay of the men should also be at once increased from 1s. 2d. to 1s. 6d. per day, and the men in reserve should receive sixpence instead of fourpence, and be kept for only six years.—Lord MAHON urged the importance of a pension in obtaining good men for the army.—Sir H. STORKS, on the part of the Government, expressed sympathy with the object of the clause, to which in the form of an address they would readily have agreed. But he deprecated tying up the hands of the Government by a rigid legislative enactment. Under a system of voluntary enlistment they were in a great degree bound to take what sort of men they could get; and, in point of fact, many men under twenty were quite fit to serve abroad, and were perhaps even stouter than some men above that age. The best security was a careful and efficient medical inspection of recruits. As to increased pay, bounty had already been condemned, and it was very questionable whether good would come of raising the daily pay.—Sir W. RUSSELL thought a strict enactment would prove very embarrassing to the Government.—Major DICKSON, Colonel NORTH, and Colonel BARTTELOT, generally supported the clause.—Mr. OSBORNE regretted the red-tape character of Sir H. Storks's reply. There was nothing in it but a recurrence to the old pigeonholes of the Horse Guards. It was of no use to borrow the small detail of three years' service from the Germans unless we took their system of compulsory service as well. There was only one way of popularising the army, and that was by increasing the pay. Our present condition was disgraceful. The army was getting into such a mess and muddle that if any emergency arose the country could not leave our defences in the hands of the present Administration. The clause was then negatived without a division.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, June 23.—THE EUPHRATES VALLEY RAILWAY.—On the motion for going into Committee of Supply, Sir G. JENKINSON rose to call the attention of the House to the subject of the proposed plan of connecting the Mediterranean Sea with the head of the Persian Gulf by means of a railway along the Valley of the Euphrates, and the great advantages offered by that line in the enormous saving of both time and distance and expense for the conveyance of her Majesty's mails and troops, as well as of passengers, &c., between England and India, thus showing of what vital importance it is to this country to secure that additional route to or from our Eastern possessions; and to move for a select committee to examine and report upon the whole subject of railway communication between the Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf. He observed that if England had been in possession of this line of railway at the time of the Indian mutiny there would have been a vast saving both of life and money. The great point for them to gain was the possession of an alternative route to that of the Suez Canal; and that was the chief reason why he was anxious that his subject should be investigated. There were no engineering difficulties to overcome in the construction of this railway at all comparable to those which had been successfully surmounted in the case of the Suez Canal. The portion of their frontier in India most exposed to attack was the north-western frontier, and that was the part of the country which this railway would most benefit. If this line were constructed it would save a week in time between England and the north-western part of India; it would save a thousand miles in distance, and it would avoid the pestilential heat and the dangerous navigation of the Red Sea. Both the termini of the line would be on the sea, and thus as long as England held the mastery of the ocean she would be able to protect the railway. It was difficult to calculate the money saving which would be effected by this line, but it had been estimated that £40,868 would be saved in the transport of troops, and £60,000 in the conveyance of mails. The line had been explored both by General Chesney and Sir John M'Neil, and there was no doubt that it was practicable.—Mr. T. BRASSEY stated that it had been calculated that the traffic on this railway would give 5½ per cent. on the estimated cost of the line. He hoped the country would not commit itself to a fixed payment irrespective of service rendered; but if the line should prove of great postal advantage that the Government might consider the propriety of using it for the conveyance of mails.—Mr. G. DUFF stated the Government had no objection to grant a committee to inquire into the different routes of communication proposed between the Mediterranean Sea and the Persian Gulf. It must be understood, however, that the Government did not commit itself to the proposition that any line of communication by railway between the Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf was in any way feasible. Still less did it commit itself to the opinion that any one of the proposed routes was either feasible or desirable. It was their wish to go into the inquiry absolutely unprejudiced. The physical difficulties of the undertaking were great, the political difficulties were greater, and the financial difficulties were perhaps greater still; but so many men of weight and repute had expressed an opinion in favour of one or other of these routes that it was at least fair that they should have an opportunity of coming before a committee of this House, and showing how these difficulties should be overcome.—Mr. CAVE said that many people thought the best starting point for the line would be Trebizonde, in the Black Sea; and he thought the inquiry should be extended so as to include other routes than those starting from the Mediterranean.—Sir C. WINGFIELD believed that financially the proposed line would be a failure. He hoped the Government would not only not give a grant in aid of the line, but that it would give no pecuniary assistance to the enterprise, or even use its influence with the Turkish Government, or persuade it to grant concessions to its promoters.—Mr. E. DENISON was extremely glad that the Government had seen fit to grant this committee.—Mr. DODSON reminded the House that the motion was for a committee to examine not only into the Euphrates Valley, but into the whole subject of railway communication between the Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf. His own impression was that the Tigris Valley would afford the best route; it would go through a comparatively peaceful country, partly agricultural, partly pastoral, and be accessible by the roads from Persia, and available for travellers from that country. He would suggest that the motion should be amended by the addition of the words "Mediterranean or Black Sea."—Mr. KINNAIRD had never heard of any line which had had so much cold water thrown upon it except the grand route to San Francisco, that had proved so great a success. This country was the workshop of the world; working men should regard this as their question; and he much regretted that the Government of the day did not give to projects of this kind the encouragement that was given by Lord Palmerston. (Hear, hear.)—Mr. EASTWICK gave preference to the Euphrates Valley route, on the grounds of the easier construction of the line and the probability of greater traffic than by the Tigris Valley. As the Suez Canal must ever remain a monument of French enterprise, so he hoped that the Euphrates Valley would not be allowed to lie as a corresponding memorial of lack in the British of those qualities which had distinguished the French.—Mr. WILLIAMS observed that the losses of the Peninsular and Oriental Company in the conveyance of passengers from Suez had been singularly low.—Mr. AYTOUN regretted the appointment of the committee. On the authority of Mr. Palgrave, he found that the entire population of Asiatic Turkey only amounted to 15,000,000, and he did not think that held out a promising prospect for the shareholders of this railway; but that was their affair, and did not concern the people of this country, unless the Government gave guarantees for the proposed railway. He hoped that no step would be taken by the Government which would in any sense lead to the expectation of any material guarantee or of any political support.—The House divided—For the appointment of the committee, 86; against, 10; majority for, 76.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

OUR BOY SOLDIERS.

The Times observes that in the present state of the army a rigid clause, such as Mr. M'Cullagh Torrens proposed, would seem impracticable. But this is no reason why the rule should not be accepted as our guide for the future. It is certainly disheartening, when we have reached this cardinal question, to hear nothing from the Government but the old story of the difficulties of recruiting without the aid of compulsion, and of the peculiar service required in the British army. These difficulties are known. We want some sign that the Government will address itself to overcome them. If Mr. M'Cullagh Torrens's rule be a good one, it follows that we ought to manage our recruiting with a view to observing it. We ought to endeavour to enlist men at such an age as always to possess an adequate force of men over twenty for foreign service. Mr. Holms therefore showed a true appreciation of the subject in urging his amendment as a kind of "rider" to that of Mr. M'Cullagh Torrens. Unless the figures Mr. Holms quoted can be disputed, they seem to prove conclusively that there would be no difficulty in obtaining all our recruits from men at least over eighteen. If under terms of service which disgust one-third of our recruits at the outset we can still enlist such a large proportion of men at a valuable age, may we not surmise that our difficulties in obtaining good soldiers are simply due to a lack of prudent liberality in the terms we offer? It is a mere matter of the labour market. Moreover, after Mr. Holms's figures, it is very doubtful whether the extra expense requisite to render the army attractive would really add to its present cost. What must not be the waste of a system under which a third of our recruits run through the ranks like water through a sieve? The longer the question is discussed, the more does the conviction press that we need above all things to shake off the inveterate habit of trying to bolster up an imperfect system by perpetual shifts and changes. We want, in the first place, a thoroughly good active army as the basis of our defence alike at home and abroad, and we must pay fo it. The money, we shall find, would be economically spent, and we should have little difficulty in arranging the supplementary portions of our system around it.

The Post contends that the adoption of Mr. Torrens's clause would be to simply hamper the executive, who are already as fully alive as Mr. Torrens to the evils of employing immature men as soldiers either at home or abroad. If a sufficiency of recruits of riper years and finer physique offered themselves to the recruiting agents, such men would be enlisted before and in preference to the "boy soldiers," of whom we have far more than enough. But the men must be obtained. The numbers voted must be filled up. No doubt the class of men required are to be had if they be paid for. There would be no lack of really good recruits if the remuneration for, and the terms and conditions of, service, were altered in accordance with the exigencies of the labour market and with the feelings and desires of the men. We shall eventually have to come to this. But the problem is difficult. The conditions and issues involved are complex. The matter is not to be settled off-hand. At the same time, it is certain that much might soon be done towards the attainment of the desired result. And it is much to be regretted that the prolonged opposition to the opening clauses of the Bill should have rendered impossible an ample discussion of the subject during the present session of Parliament.

FROM BOMBAY TO BANGALORE.—Having been one of the first to make the journey from Bombay since the railway was completed, it may interest your readers if I give a few notes of it. I left Bombay at noon on May 2, and, arriving at Poona at 7 P.M., after dining at the hotel near the station, again started at 8.30 for this place (Bangalore.) After a cool journey, owing to some showers of rain, I reached Raichoor at noon next day. Here breakfast was ready, and we left again soon after, and arrived at Arconum junction about 11 A.M. on the following day. The country between Poona and Raichoor is uncultivated and uninteresting, but improves near Cuddapah. The G.I.P. carriages are comfortable; but those on the Madras Railway are quite the reverse—being small, and so arranged that when the upper seat is put up the person sleeping on it gets no air. In the G.I.P. carriages a space is left open through which the breeze comes. Again, on the Madras Railway, no conveniences are provided in the way of basins, towels, &c. In spite of all this, the managers of the line have the "cheek" to charge extra for night mails! One would suppose that an honourable spirit of rivalry would be inspired by the contact of these two railway companies, and that "the Benighted" would wish to show that they are not so benighted as they are painted. It is to be hoped that they will before long prove that they have some self-respect and consideration for the public, and not compel passengers to travel in narrow, stuffy carriages which might have been in use in less civilised times, but are quite out of date in this progressive age. To return to my journey, Arconum is a junction on the main line from Madras to Beypore. Here we have to change and go down the line to Jolarpet. Here again Bangalore passengers must change. Leaving Arconum at 8.30 P.M., I got to Jolarpet at 1.30 A.M., and to Bangalore at seven A.M. The climate of this place is all that can be wished, and superior to the Neilgherries in some respects, for there is less rain. Only two months in the year are at all hot as a rule, viz., April and May, and this year even May is cool, in consequence of an early monsoon. Since my last visit, the new building for Government offices has been completed. Though not elegant in appearance, it forms a prominent object, on account of its size. A new post-office has also been built.—Times of India Correspondent.

Mails to India, &c.

The Mails to all parts of India, VIA SOUTHAMPTON, are now made up at the General Post Office, London, every Saturday at 8 A.M., and those VIA BRENNER and BRINDISI every Friday, at 6 P.M.

For Ceylon, China, Straits Settlements, &c., the date of the next despatch will be:—
VIA SOUTHAMPTON, on the Saturday, July 1.
VIA BRENNER and BRINDISI, on the Friday, June 30.

The postage on letters may either be paid in advance or left to be paid on delivery, but in all cases where the postage is not fully pre-paid, the Letters will be charged; on delivery, with one additional rate of Ninepence, besides the deficiency of postage. In the case of Newspapers, Books, &c., the prepayment of the postage is compulsory. Parcels must not in any case exceed 5 lbs. in weight, or be of greater dimensions than twenty-four inches in length, and twelve inches in width or depth.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS, Perfected and Exhibited in the Great Exhibition of 1851, is allowed by upwards of 200 Medical Gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of Hernia. The use of a steel spring, so often hurtful in its effects, is here avoided; a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss [which cannot fail to fit] forwarded by post on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the Manufacturer, Mr. WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London.

Price of a Single Truss, 16s., 21s., 26s. 6d., and 31s. 6d., postage, 1s. Price of Double Truss, 31s. 6d., 42s., and 52s. 6d.; postage, 1s. 8d. Umbilical, 42s. and 52s. 6d.; postage, 1s. 10d.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

MEDICINAL EFFICACY.—In cases of glandular and other diseases arising from hereditary taints, the use of these healing and purifying remedies are always followed by the most gratifying results. The Ointment must be well rubbed upon the skin as near as possible to the ailing part, and the Pills should be taken every night in alterative rather than purgative doses. These excellent medicaments will then act in unison, quell the local mischief, re-establish purity and order through the system, and spare unmerited suffering or untimely death. Scrofula, scurvy, and the most loathsome class of skin diseases are removable by the cleansing, correcting, and soothing influences of Holloway's well-known preparations, which are admirably adapted for delicate constitutions.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, June 6; Agra and Madras, June 4; Calcutta, June 3. The previous Bombay Mail of May 30 did not arrive in London before Wednesday last, but what of news it brought will be found embodied in our present issue.

The formal creation of the new Department of Revenue, Agriculture, and Commerce has already been announced by telegram; but a few fresh particulars regarding it may be gleaned from the Indian papers. It appears for instance that Mr. A. O. Hume, the Chief Secretary to the Department, will draw a monthly salary of Rs. 3,500, instead of the £5,000 a-year usually drawn by officers of his rank. The smaller salary involves no fresh charge upon the revenue, the whole cost indeed of the new department having been met by small savings and transfers of clerks from other offices. Mr. Geoghegan, the new Under Secretary, has been taken over from the Home Office on his old salary, and Mr. Rivett-Carnac, in serving under Mr. Hume, will continue to discharge his former duties, with the addition of some new work in the way of inspection. Mr. Hume's old post of Commissioner of Inland Customs is handed over to Mr. Batten, a worthy successor. We too would fain hope with the Englishman that one result of the new arrangements will be ere long "to abolish or greatly to modify the costly and barbarous Customs line which now stretches across India."

THE Viceregal Council met again at Simlah on the 26th of May for about five minutes—the time which Mr. Davies took to explain the purport of his Bill for a local cess on land in the Punjab. The Bill in question, like those previously enacted for Oude and the North-West Provinces, empowers the Lieutenant-governor of the Punjab to levy on the land a special rate of not more than three per cent. on its yearly value, and to decree exemptions entire or partial in any case that he may see fit. Wherever a road-cess of two per cent. on the land revenue is already collected, one half of that cess will be merged in the new rate. This mode of raising local revenue is already well-known to the people of that province. No new machinery is needed for its collection, nor does it involve any "minute or vexatious inquiries." The Bill was at once referred to a Select Committee.

THE trial of the alleged Wahabees, Ameer Khan, Hashmadad Khan, and others, was begun at Patna on the 30th May. Mr. J. O'Kinealy, of the Civil Service, conducts the prosecution, while four barristers, Messrs. Ingram, Lingham, Mendes, and Macgregor, have charge of the defence. An application from the latter for separate trials was refused by the Judge, on the plea that all the cases referred to one same conspiracy, and that the euidence taken by the magistrate appeared to implicate all the prisoners alike. It was falsely asserted that the Judge would neither allow the prisoners an interpreter nor give them particulars of the charges on which they were to be tried. The prisoners, being natives of Patna, need no interpreter in a Court where Hindi is the language spoken; and when Mr. Ingram demanded an interpreter for himself, he was very properly told to find his own interpreter. Two of the barristers need no such help to the understanding of a tongue with which they have long been familiar; but apparently an interpreter has since been granted to their colleagues. With regard to the other assertion, it appears that copies of the charges against the prisoners had been placed at their disposal long ago. The fact of the matter seems to be, that the barristers applied for details of the charges, whereupon the Judge remarked that he would, if need were, detail the charges as the evidence proceeded. We are told that Mr. Anstey, who had been engaged to defend the two chief prisoners, Ameer Khan and Hashmadad Khan, got no further on his way than Benares. There he learned that a junior counsel would not be employed to help him, although his brief contained 350 pages of closely printed foolscap. This being the case, Mr. Anstey threw up his brief and returned to Bombay.

IN pursuance of arrangements sanctioned by the Secretary of State, Ajmere has been placed under a Chief Commissioner since the 1st April last. The Governor-General's Agent in Rajpootana is appointed Chief Commissioner by virtue of his office, with the special powers of Judicial and Financial Commissioner. Under him Mr. L. S. Saunders takes the post of Commissioner, Mr. J. Innes of Extra Assistant Commissioner, and Mr. R. Bower that of District Superintendent of Police.

THE reported surrender of Mr. Winchester's little girl by her Loshai captors appears to be still an unaccomplished fact. It is certain however that negotiations for her release have been going on for some time past. Messengers have been sent to the Loshai camp with the ransom money demanded for Mary Winchester, and the Government are in daily hopes of hearing that she has been given up. In this connection we may mention that a deputation of gentlemen concerned in the tea trade of Bengal waited on Mr. Campbell on May 30, in order to express their views as to the best way of guarding the Cachar frontier against future inroads. We need hardly add that they all agreed in recommending a retaliatory movement against the raiders in the next cold season. The policy of such a measure, taken so long after the outrage which provoked it, seems to us rather questionable, as a means of preventing similar raids in the future.

MR. EDEN appears to have acted well and promptly with regard to a matter which had caused no little uneasiness in British Burmah. According to the last Customs' Act the salt duty in that province had been suddenly raised from three to eight annas a maund—that is, from 4½d. to 1s. 3d. for eighty pounds. Great was the consternation felt at so large and sudden an increase. Mr. Eden at once telegraphed to the Supreme Government, and the result is that the salt-duty is not to be raised in British Burmah.

THE Englishman professes to have discovered the real cause of the despatch which has awakened so much alarm among the covenanted civilians in India. "A startling rise in the disbursements at the India Office to members of the services on leave" led to the inditing of a letter on the need of some serious amendments in the new Furlough Rules. It was however forgotten that the increased outlay at home might be counterbalanced by savings in India, where half salaries only were drawn by those who kept places warm for the absentees. In point of fact the Military Department has in this way saved about £15,000, and in spite of the many furloughs so quickly taken by the Civil Service, there has on the whole been a clear saving in the two departments together. In the course of a year or two the untoward rush of civil officers home will cease, and then the new rules will result in a material saving to the Government as well as in general benefit to the Services. Be that as it may, it is stated that the Indian Government has written home a decided negative to the proposals contained in the Duke of Argyll's despatch.

THE Indian Government has just paid a becoming tribute to the great services rendered by Colonel Strachey "during a long series of years, and more especially during his late tenure of the offices of Inspector-general of Irrigation, and Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department." It was Colonel Strachey who had the chief share in organising the Irrigation Department of the Public Works; and to his "most valuable advice and assistance" the Viceroy in Council owns himself deeply indebted for the measures already taken to extend the Indian railway system under the direct control of the State. The Colonel's active mind however ranged continually beyond the mere business of his department, so that the viceregal tribute would not have been complete without a special reference to Colonel Strachey's "great ability and untiring energy," as displayed in "the Legislative Council and in many other ways." Let us hope, with Lord Mayo and his colleagues, that so active-minded an officer may yet find at home a fitting sphere for the further exercise of his undoubted talents, whether in the Indian Council or in the board-room of some great joint-stock company.

THE Bill for building a bridge over the Hooghly was finally passed at the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council on Saturday May 27. Mr. Schalch's Bill for a local cess was announced for a first reading on the following Saturday; and then the Lieutenant-Governor proceeded to explain the means by which he purposed to make both ends meet financially for the current year, without levying any new taxes. That there must eventually be some new taxation, Mr. Campbell would not deny; but for the present he was resolved to cut his coat according to the cloth at his immediate disposal. Other financiers in various parts of India had lately been obliged to drop the measures they had just before proposed, and a still greater financier had failed in the same way at home. These failures had taught him caution, and so he had determined to do the best he could with existing means, rather than bring in a crude and futile scheme of fresh taxation. Through certain reductions in the charges for police and printing, Mr. Campbell hoped to get through the year with a small surplus at the end. In respect of public works, he proposed to make shift with the Rs. 34,00,000 set down against them, by following Mr. Massey's principle of beginning no new work without a fair prospect of carrying it on regularly to an early completion.

THE cholera, which had lately broken out in Secunderabad, appears to be fast abating, after having attacked sixty and killed thirty men of the 18th Hussars up to the end of May. Happily no other regiment in the station had suffered to nearly the same extent. On the morning of the 29th May the Hussars changed camp to Cheerulah, about ten miles from Secunderabad. Among the natives only a few had been attacked up to the 28th May. Since then a hailstorm had ushered in cooler weather, and there was every reason to hope that the station would soon be rid of the scourge.

THE late proceedings against suspected Wahabees at Patna are said to have caused such a panic among the ill-disposed, that numbers of them were making their way northwards, to join their brother-fanatics in Yagistan. As their road however lay through Kashmere, its Maharajah is said to have issued orders for their seizure and conveyance into the hands of the Hazara authorities. Whether these latter will be grateful for the reintroduction of so much perilous matter which India could well be rid of, we are not informed. Perhaps the ruler of Kashmere has very good reasons for declining to tolerate such unpleasant neighbours; but the Indian Government can hardly wish that his efforts to arrest their flight should prove successful.

CHANDERNAGORE has lately been going through the excitement of electing a member to represent the French-Indian territories in the national legislature of France. Mr. Alfred Courjon, a gentleman well known in that neighbourhood, was asked to stand, but he declined on the plea of having too much business to mind in India. His nominee, however, Mr. Amalric, was easily elected by a majority of 906 votes. Commenting on this little event, the Englishman argues that our own Government might take the hint, and "allow Englishmen in India to return some delegates to Parliament to represent English interests in the East." So it might, if Parliament directly represented any other interests than those of the British Islands. If we were ever likely to get such a thing as a truly Imperial Legislature, India, both native and European, would take her place there beside the purely British colonies. Probably a larger admixture of the non-official element might with advantage be imported into the Indian Council. Meanwhile however English interests in India are not wholly unrepresented, in substance if not in form, in the British Parliament, as the composition of the Finance Committee serves to show; and in the Councils of the local governments their mouthpieces already wield some sort of influence, which every year will tend to strengthen and enlarge.

ACCORDING to Indian Public Opinion, Yakoob Khan has not been letting the grass grow under his feet. After the capture of Herat, he at once proceeded to win the hearts of certain chiefs and followers with handsome presents of khillats (robes) and rupees—the probable outcome of money borrowed or seized from one of the banks in the city. His liberality at any rate is said to have made him so "extremely popular," that the chiefs, shouting his praises, demanded to be led against the Ameer's troops at Furrah. A sudden onset by night on some of the troops in question forced them to fly with heavy loss; and when General Feramorz Khan sought to retrieve the disaster by a bold charge with his troopers, he also had to retire, it seems, with much loss. The rumour of his being himself wounded needs confirmation. On hearing what had happened, Shere Ali was hardly dissuaded from going at once to Furrah, and taking the command there himself. Afzul Khan however had obtained his leave to try negotiations first with Yakoob Khan, and in the event of failure therein it was arranged that Shere Ali should carry out his first intentions. It appears that the fall of Herat had been known in the bazaars of India some time before it was announced by the Indian Government.

MEANWHILE the forces of Abdurrahman and Ishak Khan appear to be steadily advancing from Maimana, between Herat and Bokhara, upon Balkh. Ishak Khan had already reached Shiburghan, half-way towards Balkh, and by some accounts has even got within sight of that place; but this is deemed unlikely, since he had agreed not to move on Takhtapool, which is close to Balkh, before Abdurrahman Khan could join him.

ACCORDING to a Calcutta telegram of July 1, the Ameer of Kabul actually started for Herat on June 26, six weeks after the fall of the city. Afzul Khan's advice has apparently been followed so far that conciliatory letters have passed between Shere Ali and his victorious son. The former appears to have been strongly urged forward on the path of reconciliation by Lord Mayo himself. The best thing he can do is to make up his quarrel with Yakoob Khan on any terms that would not be absolutely disgraceful. Let him recognise Yakoob as Governor of Herat and heir to the Afghan throne, and the gale that is now raging round him will soon in all likelihood "dwindle to a calm."

A STILL later telegram of July 3 states that Yakoob Khan started on June 9 to meet his father and discuss the terms of a reconciliation. After advancing nine marches, he halted awaiting a safe-conduct. Shere Ali has sent Ahmed Khan to reassure his son and escort him to Kabul. We also learn that Feramorz Khan was murdered in his tent on the 6th June, and that Shere Ali has appointed Daood Shah to command the troops in his stead.

WE congratulate Colonel Probyn on his final escape from the doom of suspended promotion pronounced last year on all expectant colonels of the Indian army, as a sop to their superseded comrades in the old British Army. The stoppage of his well-earned promotion was due, it seems, to a wrong belief at the War Office that General Podmore's death had not occurred till after the presentation of the supersession Committee's Report. That error has now been rectified, to the advantage of Colonel Probyn; but meanwhile several of his juniors are suffering all the hardship of promotion suspended for the last twelvemonth in seeming contravention of the Parliamentary guarantee.

UNDER the wholesome spurring of Lord Westbury, we are glad to see that the Lord Chancellor is pushing forward his Bill to reform the working of the Privy Council as a Court of Appeal. Of the four additional judges whom his Lordship would appoint to the Judicial Committee, two will be selected from the retired Chief Justices of the High Court at Calcutta, the other two being eligible from among present or former judges in the Westminster Courts. All four are to receive a salary of £1,500 a-year besides their retiring pensions, so long as they do the work required of them. The Bill, which was read a second time last Thursday, provides also for continuous sittings of the Committee between November and August.

IN the course of his recent lecture on Female Education in Bengal, Dr. Ghose enlarged on the advantage of bringing the ladies of India into closer contact with their enlightened English sisters. Among the lessons which the latter may teach the former shall we include the refining influences of a day spent in watching the massacre of pigeons at Hurlingham Park? It appears to be the proper thing for the most elegant and high-bred of English ladies to grace with their admiring presence the progress of a kind of sport which for sheer cruelty challenges comparison with the worst of those which the fashion of the day has made over to the lowest ranks of our society. Is attendance at Hurlingham to be included among those lessons of refinement which the women of India are to learn from ours? Humanity has never been a leading trait in the character of Hindoos or of Mohammedans in India; and yet we are told that the Nawab of Bengal, who in his own country would probably sit out a wild-beast fight or a bout of cockfighting with perfect satisfaction, lifted up the eyebrows of astonishment at the kind of butchery which is called sport at Hurlingham. Our Indian sisters may as well remain in the privacy of their own zenanas, if this be the morality they are to imbibe from contact with us of the superior race.

WE note that the old Messageries Imperiales, under the name of Messageries Maritimes, are to resume running their steamers fortnightly to India, China, and Japan, on the 9th of July, from Marseilles.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, July 4, 1871.

THE LANDHOLDERS OF BENGAL.

THE imposition of a cess rate on the lands of Bengal for the local purposes of making roads and educating the people is creating a mighty stir among the landholders of Bengal. We have received a pamphlet containing the proceedings of a meeting, held in Calcutta on the 3rd April, 1871, of the landholders of Bengal. All the speakers denounced the cess impost as a direct infringement of the permanent settlement made by the Government of Lord Cornwallis in 1793, and a petition to Parliament, embodying their views, was read and unanimously agreed to by the meeting. The landholders, in that petition, and in their several speeches, take great pains to represent the permanent settlement as a solemn compact, or contract, entered into by the Government on the one side, and by the landholders on the other, by which, on payment of a certain fixed sum annually, the landholders were to be exempted for ever from all future demands. They, no doubt, expect to enlist the sympathies of Parliament by representing the permanent settlement as a solemn contract between two parties, and the imposition of a cess as a breach of that solemn contract; but the case is most erroneously stated, for the permanent settlement was not a contract, nor is the imposition of a cess an infringement of the permanent settlement. Lord Cornwallis's proclamation in 1793, making the Decennial settlement permanent, was a boon conferred upon the landholders of Bengal with the purpose, as the proclamation stated, of stimulating them to exert themselves in the cultivation of their lands; but it never was intended, or could have been intended, that this limitation to the demand of the tax on land was to exempt the landholders for all time from paying their share of a general tax imposed upon the whole empire to meet the demands of the State, or from paying any local cesses for the making of roads or for educational purposes. The cry of a breach of the permanent settlement was raised when Mr. Wilson, in 1860, proposed his Income-tax, but the landholders very wisely abandoned their opposition to the tax, as they found that it would not succeed, and they became aware that an obstinate claim to be exempted from the tax on the plea of the permanent settlement, would lead to the discussion of the very important question, why a settlement of the revenue on land should exempt the landholders from the payment of such general taxes as were imposed upon the whole nation? They regarded the Income-tax as a measure imposed for a short time, and after the expiration of that time not likely to be again levied. They, therefore, pretended that they submitted to it, or, as the Maharajah of Burdwan phrases it, consented to the tax as a resource to relieve financial difficulties created by the great Sepoy Mutiny. In giving this consent, they did not relinquish their right to protest against any future tax that might be imposed upon them, and now that a cess is about to be levied on their lands they assert that right, and unanimously declare that the imposition of a cess is a direct breach of the permanent settlement. They ignore the fact that the cess is not an increase of the land-tax for Imperial purposes, but a rate levied for local purposes, for the improvement of their own territory by the construction of roads, and for the enlightenment of people by the introduction of educational establishments. There is not a province in India that does not pay cesses for similar purposes, and no opposition has been made to their imposition. It is reserved for Bengal alone to oppose the cess and to raise the cry of breach of contract, infringement of settlement. The chairman of the meeting went so far as to express a wish that the select Committee sitting on Indian Finance would come out to India to ascertain the real feelings of the people of India regarding divers public questions, and amongst others, no doubt, this great question of the cess. Let us suppose such a move possible, and that the Committee could be transported to Bengal to take the evidence of landholders and others. How astonished they would be when they discovered the very small sum paid by landholders as land revenue, compared to the enormous amount derived by them from their rent-rolls. They would discover the fact that the permanent settlement entails upon the Government an annual loss, as compared with the settlements in the other provinces of India where permanent settlements do not exist, of a sum calculated by competent persons at six millions sterling. They would discover that, in order to fulfil a promise given eighty years ago to the holders of land in one province, the whole of India had been taxed, and those landholders had become the wealthiest class of the community. In view of the great inequality which the permanent settlement has established between the landholders of Bengal, and the landholders of all the other provinces of India, and the enormous loss of revenue to the State, it might occur to the Committee to call in question the right of a Government to bind for ever all future Governments to abstain from all further demand on the land, other than that imposed by itself. We will not argue the question, but we strongly advise the landholders of Bengal not to provoke its discussion. Last Tuesday the petition of the landholders was presented in the House of Lords by Lord Lyveden, who said little in its favour. The Duke of Argyll, in his reply, proved satisfactorily that the imposition of a local cess for local purposes was not precluded by the permanent settlement, and the Marquis of Salisbury agreed with the noble Duke that there was no breach of faith in the imposition of these new taxes. After a few words from Lord Harris the subject dropped, and this is all the notice that has been taken of the petition in the House of Lords.

THE TRADE OF KANGRA.

THE progress of Kangra as a seat of trade and industry is a topic of more than common interest for people who take any interest in things Indian; and Major Paske has a fine enthusiastic way of commending such a topic to his readers' favouring regards. His latest memorandum on the Kangra District enhances the impression left by his previous reports. It is just twenty-one years ago since that pleasant and picturesque cluster of hills and valleys, which fringes the Himalayas above Umritsur, became the scene of some experiments in tea-planting, which, begun by the Government, have since been greatly developed by private enterprise. The Kangra District, which includes the outlying valleys of Kulu, Spiti, and Lahoul, has a population of more than three-quarters of a million, spread over a surface of 12,861 square miles. Bounded on the north by Ladakh, it stretches from Shahpore on the west to the borders of Chinese Tartary on the east. To the natural beauties of the Kangra Valley the late Mr. G. Barnes paid a glowing tribute in his Settlement Report. Nowhere else, we are told, can such "sublime and delightful contrasts," so much of peaceful beauty combined with so much of stern grandeur, be seen. Sternly majestic hills, clad with forests of oak below and pine above, their steep sides scored with water-courses, and their tops showing a wild waste of snow intershaded with steep cliffs of granite, overlook a rich plain of cultivated verdure, dotted with homesteads and crossed by winding streams, "a picture of rural loveliness and repose." Pity that such a picture should remain so little studied by our travelling countrymen! Still lovelier, in Major Paske's opinion, is the Kulu Valley. Very pleasant also, except in the rainy months, is the climate of nearly the whole district, being well suited to European frames. Some parts of course are milder or moister than others, but Englishmen who have lived ten years in the Kangra Valley appear to have kept their health as well as they would have done at home.

Among the indigenous products of the soil are wheat, barley, lentils, pease, beans, rapeseed, flax, safflower, rice, maize, millet, buckwheat, cotton, sugar-cane, and turmeric, besides tobacco, spices, potatoes, many other kinds of vegetables, and rice, of which there are said to be sixty varieties. The Kangra rice is in great demand throughout the Punjab and in parts of the North-West Provinces. Sugar-cane of good quality is largely grown. Three new staples, tea, china-grass, and cinchona, have been introduced by ourselves of late years. In 1854, two years after its first formation, the Holtah tea-garden contained 400 acres of good land under tea. In 1860 private enterprise took up the trade, and eight years afterwards nineteen private estates, held by Europeans, turned out in all about 250,000 lbs. of tea from 2,700 acres actually planted out of thrice that acreage reserved for similar purposes. Year by year the cultivated area is growing wider, nor has the producing power per acre yet reached its limits. Besides the home and the Indian markets, both of which show a steadily improving demand, Kangra has unbounded possibilities before her in the tea-marts of Central Asia and even of Russia. By means of the Suez Canal Indian teas may be delivered in Russian ports at prices which would soon transfer the trade from Chinese into Indian hands.

That China grass will thrive well at small outlay whether of pains or pence, the experiments carried on by Mr. James Montgomery from 1863 till now have abundantly proved. The [illegible] thing wanting to make the experiments pay is some machinery for separating the fibre from the stem. If the fibre could only be landed in this country at a total cost of £25 a ton, a wide margin of profit could be ensured to the planter on a staple which can be woven into very beautiful tissues, whether of grass alone or of grass mixed with silk or cotton.

To Major Nassau Lees of the Bengal Army belongs the credit of having introduced the Cinchona plant in 1864 into the Kangra Valley. From his experiments have resulted four thriving plantations covering fifty-three acres with more than 29,000 healthy young trees. Besides these there are 70,000 young plants which in course of time should cover 150 acres more. Several thousand young plants have already been raised from some of the largest trees, and the bark extracted from the young trees has yielded a fair amount of alkaloid. In view however of the cost of transporting the raw bark to England, Major Paske suggests the need of having it manufactured on the spot.

Wool of good quality is produced in abundance from the large flocks of sheep and goats which the hill tribe of Guddees rear for their own livelihood. In minerals also the district is far from poor. Good hard building-stone abounds everywhere, and slate-quarries have been opened in various places. Kulu is rich in mines of valuable ore, especially lead, copper, antimony, cobalt, and arsenic, which have hitherto been extracted from the surface alone, for want of means and capital to work the mines.

Except in tea and rice, the local trade of Kangra is still small. The town of Kangra is a place of pilgrimage rather than trade. At Noorpore shawls are made by immigrants from Kashmere. Palampore now has an annual fair, started by Mr. Forsyth, at which the local products are exchanged among other things for English piece goods. Thither also merchants bring their wares from Yarkand by way of Ladakh and Lahoul; but this route, as Major Paske admits, will give place to the easier route through Kashmere, whenever the Maharajah of that kingdom shall see fit to abolish the heavy transit dues which have nearly killed the old trade between India and Kashmere. Traders from Hindustan moreover dislike going to Palampore, while those from Ladakh and Yarkand are often obliged to return home through Kashmere by the early closing of the passes along the Laboul route. A far better spot for a fair, in Major Paske's opinion, is Umritsar, the commercial capital of the Punjab. It is there that the streams of traffic from Eastern and Western Turkistan must meet; thither also would necessarily flow the traffic from Lahoul and Kangra, while traders from the south have no objection to come so far north. Connected with Bombay by an unbroken line of railway, Umritsar might be made an important mart for the exchange of Indian staples and Central Asian wares with the manufactured goods of Liverpool and Manchester. To the trade of this city a fresh impulse will be given by the completion of the railways from Lahore to Peshawar, and from Mooltan to Kotree on the Indus. The new line of Russian steamers from Odessa to Bombay through the Suez Canal should also tend to develop a new trade with Kangra and Umritsar, for traffic begets traffic, and Russian goods would be freely taken in exchange for Indian teas.

For similar reasons Major Paske argues warmly in favour of a railway down the Euphrates Valley, and of a capacious harbour at Kurrachee. The latter want will soon be supplied and, since Major Paske wrote his memorandum, the project of a railway from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf has at any rate reached the stage of Parliamentary discussion. If that project however can only be carried out on condition of our maintaining the integrity of Turkey, its execution must, we fear, be deferred to a very distant date.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

TEACHING OF PHYSICAL SCIENCE IN INDIAN UNIVERSITIES.

The Englishman observes that there has long been an uneasy suspicion abroad, and it is a notion that gains ground every day amongst those best qualified to judge, that we have been educating and civilising nations of Hindus on the same principles, and by the same methods, that we should have rightly used if the objects of our educational operations had been nations of Englishmen or Scotchmen. We have almost ignored national differences of character and requirements. Finding the Hindu mind, where it possessed any indigenous activity at all, absorbed in abstruse and often fanciful speculations on the problems of existence and futurity, we have heaped upon it the burden of Western metaphysics; we have crammed it with Hamilton and Reid, and prescribed for it a B.A. course, of which no less than a fifth of the whole is taken up with Logic and Mental and Moral Philosophy. Finding a country in the most urgent need of cheap (and, therefore, indigenous) scientific skill—a country where agriculture and mining are in the rudest state, where inventive skill and mechanical and manufacturing ingenuity have been dormant for centuries, where engineering and chemistry are almost unknown, where the sciences of medicine and surgery are in their infancy—a country, in a word, with boundless natural resources and a teeming population, almost totally deficient in all the modern appliances for developing those resources and for ameliorating the condition of that population—in our scheme of education we have banished the physical and experimental sciences, that can alone supply these wants, to an optional place in a curriculum which is already overcrowded with compulsory subjects. A practical and hard-headed Scotchman, whose home is a model farm, whose toys are steam-engines and spinning jennies, and whose medical skill is the admiration of the world, may well take to the study of metaphysics. According to Aristotle's law, they best attain the μέσον who follow those studies which must diverge from the natural bent of their minds; and the successful pursuit of philosophy in the Scotch Universities is a remarkable illustration of the national good-sense and versatility. But with the Hindu, to devote much time and labour to the study of metaphysics is (following out Aristotle's simile) to bend still further the tree that is already crooked. The mental discipline and the mental relaxation which are most suitable to, and most wholesome for, the natives of this country, are both to be found in those scientific studies, the pursuit of which will at the same time confer the greatest possible benefits on the country at large, and do much to remove the stigma of unpractical and visionary tendencies from the national character. Dr. Ewart has long been the consistent apostle of Physical Science as a most valuable element in any university course; and we are glad to see that he has been commissioned with Mr. Woodrow, Mr. Blanford, and Mr. Clarke—all men of distinguished scientific attainments—to draw up a report for the Senate, as the best means of introducing these subjects into the Calcutta curriculum. When the Lieutenant-Governor assured the Senate the other day that the Bengal Government was prepared to find funds for providing scientific instruction in the Government institutions, on the adoption of some well-considered scheme by the University, the successful issue of the labours of Dr. Ewart and his co adjutors was virtually assured. We congratulate Mr. Campbell on the judicious liberality which has so opportunely put it in the power of the University authorities to carry out this most necessary and most valuable reform.

THE FURLOUGH RULES.

The Bombay Gazette is glad to learn that the Government of India has sent home a strong remonstrance against the declared intention of the India Office to make a fresh change in the furlough rules of the Indian services. Frequent changes in such rules are very undesirable, for they leave every man uncertain what to expect or what arrangements he ought to make for the future; and, as the existing rules only came into force in 1868, they surely deserve a longer trial than has yet been given them. It is said that the immediate effect of the New Rules, which "lumped together Sick Leave and Furlough in one total," and, further, enabled officers "to take two years' leave on £1,200 a-year at home, before sending in their resignation," naturally was "to create a rush home of senior officers, each of whom cost the State £1,200 a-year while thus on leave. Such a rush at once told upon the disbursements at the India Office, and increased the allowances actually paid to Civilians in England by over four lacs of rupees." But this consequence of the introduction of such rules, which suddenly gave officers an accumulation of leave on high pay, ought to have been foreseen, and the question should have been fairly considered beforehand at the India Office, whether the benefits to be derived in the long run from the general working of the rules would outweigh some temporary inconveniences. We are bound to presume that the Secretary of State in Council did not sanction the rules of 1860 hastily and without any forethought, and it seems strange, therefore, that they should have taken alarm at the ugly rush of Civilians homeward bound. Moreover, the arrears of leave have now been nearly wiped out, and henceforth the proportion of officers at home on leave will not be in excess of what is reasonable. The rules, in fact, are only now getting into working order, and it will be only right to wait a few years longer before abolishing them. The reason given for the dislike with which the India Office views the rules is that some ancient Members of Council, whose latest remembrance of this country dates from the good old days in which India could only be reached by the long sea voyage round the Cape and leave to England was a privilege seldom enjoyed by Anglo-Indians, are convinced the services must be going to the dogs now that every one takes a run home whenever he gets the chance. We do not say that a man who is constantly going away on leave, either to England or elsewhere, can be a hard working and useful public servant; but, on the other hand, the opportunities of going home which an Indian Civilian now enjoys are extremely valuable not only to him but to the State. A man returns to his work refreshed and invigorated, and with some new ideas in his head, when he has paid a visit to England; and service in the East is felt to be less irksome now that it can be so easily varied by a holiday in one's native land. To condemn every Indian Civilian, as some Members of the Council are reported to be anxious to do, to serve a term of seven years, even after they have reached middle life, before they can become entitled to a furlough home, would simply be to renew the discontent that existed before 1868, and fatally to diminish the attractions of Indian service. If the Members of the Council of India are persuaded that going home is a bad thing for Anglo-Indians, why do they not come out here again themselves? Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji has declared it to be the latest Indian grievance, that this country is deprived of the administrative experience of English officials who retire to England on pensions in the prime of life; and the veteran pensioners of the Council would set a good example to younger men by boldly determining to resume their Indian career.

INDIAN MILITARY TOPOGRAPHY.

The Times of India refers to a statement in the last number of the Edinburgh Review, that in all probability the facility with which the Prussians overran France was due to their marvellous topographical knowledge, which mainly depended upon the maps possessed by them of the country; and that the maps with which the Prussian soldiers were so liberally supplied in the campaign were produced by a process which some years ago Count Moltke had sent over officers to learn in England. Any well educated staff officer knows that there is an essential difference between a military survey map and an ordinary map of a country. The accurate geographical exactness of the latter is not so much needed in the former, which should more particularly depict the military aspects of the neighbourhood. Although in India we have topographical revenue, and trigonometrical surveys – some of these the best in the world—it is very doubtful whether systematic military surveys or military reports of the country have been attempted. No official intimation has been yet given to the public of it. On the contrary, it would appear that ten years ago we had very little military knowledge of some portions of India. In some memoranda of the late Lord Canning, given in Sir W. Denison's "Varieties of Viceregal Life," he says, "That which we are most deficient in is military topographical knowledge of Central India, Rajpootana, and some parts of our old provinces. We do not even know the number or strength of native forces, or the fords of the rivers, or the passes through the hills as they ought to be known." Has this knowledge since been supplied, or have any means been taken to supply the deficiency complained of? Doubtless the operations to which Lord Canning was then referring—the Central India campaign, the marching and counter-marching in Rohilcund, the pursuit of Tantia Topie's band through Rajpootana—all added very largely to our military knowledge of the country; but what a costly method of studying physical geography! Several of the brave men who then acquired or confirmed their knowledge of Indian military topography lost their lives in the process; many of them have closed their Indian career; but a few still remain who carry that valuable and special knowledge "in their heads." On their retirement it will be lost with them, if no means be taken to record, to classify, to preserve, and to disseminate this information amongst Indian military men. Yet we have hundreds of officers on general duty!

SUTTEE.—GHAZEEPORE, May 14.—From time immemorial sutteeism had been in vogue in India, till the English laid the foundation of their Empire in the East. They from the commencement of their rule protested against this unnatural custom of the Hindoos. But their endeavours had not been completely successful in putting a stop to the shocking practice until the time of Lord Bentinck, who effected the abolition of the rite of suttee throughout the British dominions, which was declared illegal on the 17th December, 1829. We do not hear so often of sutteeism from any part of India as we do from the N.W. Provinces. Last year we heard of a suttee who burnt herself on the funeral pile of her deceased husband in the district of Cawnpore. On hearing of the occurrence, the Lieutenant-Governor, Sir William Muir, was much displeased, and condemned the proceedings of the police, and other executive officers of the district. On the 2nd instant a bumneah died of a complicated disease near the village of Russerah, some twenty-seven miles from Ghazeepore. His remains were duly burnt, according to the Hindoo custom, when his wife was prepared to perform the suttee on the funeral pile of her husband, but she was prevented from doing so by her friends and relations, who took her home from the place where the obsequies of her deceased husband were performed. But still the widow persisted in her attempt, saying to her relations that she had nothing to live for, and was resolved to perform the suttee. Seeing their persuasions were of no use, the relatives of the widow made every preparation for the ceremony. At midnight of the 2nd instant she proceeded to the field where suttees in former times used to burn themselves. There she performed the rite in the presence of her two sons-in-law, a porohit (priest) and his sister, and some other men who had come to witness the dreadful scene. The local police went to the spot to investigate the case, and reported on the 8th instant to the District Superintendent of Police that the woman had committed suicide by burning. The superintendent reported the matter to the magistrate, who deputed Mr. D. T. Roberts, assistant magistrate, and the superintendent of police to inquire into and report upon the real facts of the case. As soon as the deputed officers reached the village all the mysteries were brought to light. Mr. Roberts has treated the sister of the porohit as Queen's evidence, on her making a true confession, which she has done, with the evidence of half-a-dozen other witnesses. The depositions of the sister of the porohit and other witnesses proved the conduct of the porohit, whose confession is itself sufficient for his conviction. The accused are all arrested, and are under trial before the assistant magistrate, Mr. Roberts. The corpse of the suttee was brought here for medical examination. The medical examiner, Dr. Sheppard, principal assistant to the Benares opium agent, reported that the cause of death was burning. The conduct of the local police should be thoroughly inquired into and reported to the Government. Natives, as a rule, preclude their women from every enjoyment of life, especially after the death of their husbands. In the latter case they suffer considerable distress and uneasiness of mind. Unhappily it is not the lot of many, even in the present improved state of Hindoo society, to re-marry, if she becomes a widow in her youth. The unfortunate Hindoo ladies, especially of the upper classes, such as Brahmins and Khestries, are bound not to marry again. Let sensible Hindoos decide whose claim is superior to that of the other. The Hindoo women, on the other hand, instead of pining and decaying through grief and remorse, think it better to perform voluntary self-immolation, which is regarded as evincing goodness or excellence of character. The most important thing relative to the recent suttee is not yet known; it is her age at the time of her immolation.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

Bengal.

ANOTHER WAHABEE.—We are informed that Dr. Lewis A. Mendes is retained on behalf of Tobaruck Ali, one of the Wahabee prisoners, and has left for Patna.—Daily Examiner, May 29.

NYNEE TAL EARTHQUAKES.—A slight shock of earthquake was felt the other day at Nynee Tal, and the lake is stated to have turned a sickly green "out of sheer alarm." At that station, as at Simlah, wet and unseasonable weather has been prevalent.

THE CACHAR FRONTIER.—The Pioneer learns that all the stockaded posts which it is intended to hold during the rains, on the eastern frontier, are completed, and hopes that Brigadier-General Bourchier will now get a little not undeserved rest.

LITERARY.—A Club is about to be formed at Serampore (or thereabouts) for the translation of the Vedas and Puranas into colloquial Bengalee. Mr. Plowden, magistrate of Serampore, will, it is said, be president.

DEATH OF LIEUTENANT PURCELL.—Lieutenant Purcell, of H.M.'s 12th Regiment, sustained injuries at Simlah, which proved fatal, on the night of the ball given by the Viceroy in honour of her Majesty's birthday. His pony ran over a cliff, and the rider sustained concussion of the brain.

MEDICAL.—A Calcutta paper says that, at the instance of the Inspector-General of Hospitals, Indian Medical Department, the Government of India have decided favourably the question of the expediency of appointing supernumerary assistant surgeons to officiate for permanent uncovenanted medical officers in civil stations.

ROBBERY ON THE SEETAPORE ROAD.—According to the Lucknow Times, "an atrocious robbery has been committed on the Seetapore road; two carriages, occupied by native travellers, were attacked at night by an armed band at a short distance from the city; the drivers and several of the passengers, it is said, were wounded, and two lives were lost."

DEATH OF THE NABHA RAJAH.—The Mofussilite announces the death of his Highness Rajah Bhugwan Sing of Nabha, which took place on the 31st May. His Highness died very young, and without any issue. He belonged to the Phool family, and it is the custom with this family that when a prince dies without issue a successor is selected by the other members.

THE ZIMMAY MISSION.—The objects of Captain Lowndes's mission to Zimmay are to endeavour to settle any dispute between the people of Zimmay and British subjects, to collect information as to the trade, products, &c., of the country, to endeavour to procure a map of the country, and to offer the Chief the services of an engineer to remove the obstructions to navigation in the Hoomyndoongya river.

CROPS IN LOWER BENGAL.—Messrs. Moran's market report paints wonderful prospects for indigo this season, especially in Lower Bengal, Tirhoot, Chumparun, and Chuprah. The latest accounts of Indian tea are only moderately favourable—"the quality not having been very satisfactory thus far;" while the outlook of Indian silk is gloomy in the extreme.—Pioneer, May 30.

THE PATNA TRIALS.—The Englishman believes that neither Amir Khan nor Hasmadad Khan will be defended by counsel on their trial before the Sessions Court at Patna. "The expenses to which they have been already put in the proceedings taken on their behalf have been so great as to leave them without the means of obtaining assistance at the time at which they most require it." What about Mr. Anstey, who has gone to Patna?

CALCUTTA UNIVERSITY.—The University of Calcutta has this year examined nearly two thousand candidates for its matriculation or "entrance;" and this is in addition to the five or six-hundred who have come up for the "First-Arts," or "Little-Go," and the two hundred odd who have appeared in the B.A. and M.A. examinations. —The Lieutenant-Governor has appointed a committee to report upon the best means of introduction and study of physical science into the curriculum of study.

A HINDI DICTIONARY.—It will interest students of Hindi to learn that the Rev. Mr. Bate, the learned American Missionary of Allahabad, is preparing a dictionary of that language which will contain no fewer than 37,000 words—twelve thousand more than are contained in the largest Hindi dictionary yet published. The newest work of the kind in Hindi is already a quarter of a century old (Thompson's, published in 1846), and has for many years been out of print.—Pioneer.

DEATH OF M. DE MESURIER.—A Lucknow letter of May 25, in the Delhi Gazette, has the following paragraph:—"M. De Mesurier, a French gentleman of considerable scientific attainments, died suddenly on the evening of May 23 from an attack of apoplectic paralysis. This is precisely the disease with which General Barrow was attacked, and is the third death in this station from the same cause this season. M. De Mesurier for many years studied the cultivation and preparation of Indian fibres, and gained several prizes by his specimens. He was well known in India, and leaves a large family inconsolable at his loss, and I fear unprovided for; however, he was much respected by a large circle of friends, who no doubt will not allow his family to remain destitute."

HEALTHINESS OF CASHMERE.—Cashmere has apparently been grossly maligned, and many have been deprived of a season there in consequence of "the weak invention of an enemy," that enemy being, we suspect, some one or more of the house-owners of the sanitaria of Northern India. There has been no cholera whatever in the Happy Valley. In spite of the sinister report, the European community of Sreenugger already numbers some hundred and fifty persons, of whom about thirty-five are ladies, and the cry is still—they come, they come.

ALLAHABAD.—The health of Allahabad appears to be in a very unsatisfactory state. A correspondent, writing from that capital on the 22nd, says:—"I am sorry I cannot make a favourable report of the state of health in Allahabad. Cholera has been busy in the city and suburbs, but it is not so bad now as it was three or four days ago. Smallpox and measles are also prevalent, and fever is taking no small part in making us uncomfortable. 'Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof,' and nothing will be gained by anticipating what our state will be hereafter."—Times of India, May 30.

HINDI VERSUS URDU.—The question as to whether Urdu or Hindi ought to be the language of the Courts has been again revived. A writer in the Saharanpur Gazette, while admitting that Urdu is the current language of the day, is of opinion that its written character ought to be superseded by Nagri. Men versed in Urdu writing are rarely met with in villages, and consequently great difficulty is experienced in reading documents, summonses, and other papers, which would be removed by taking Nagri as the language of the Courts.—Englishman.

A SCENE IN COURT.—An amusing scene occurred in a court not a hundred miles from Lahore the other day. A client presented a petition in English from his pleader praying for a postponement of his case, on the ground that he could not appear on the day fixed.—Court—What? an English petition! (throwing it back), I am not bound to read English petitions. Sheristadar—Can you read that paper?—Sheristadar (who unfortunately for the Court can read English)—Yes, Sir (reads).—Court—Stop, who told you to read anything but the language of the Court? If you do so again, I will fine you for contempt!!—Indian Public Opinion.

EXPENDITURE ON PRINCE ALFRED'S RECEPTION IN INDIA.—We learn from the Indian Daily News that, on a requisition from the Home Government, a statement of expenditure incurred on account of the late visit to India of his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh has been submitted to the Secretary of State by the Government of India. From the above document it would appear that the sum of Rs. 1,58,149, or £15,814. 18s. has been incurred in India only on account of the said visit; this, of course, is exclusive of the reception charges at Calcutta, which, with striking liberality, were defrayed from Earl Mayo's private purse.

TAXING THE SOLDIER'S BEER.—We have received a letter from a private of H.M.'s 2-10th at Rangoon, complaining of a tax of four pice per glass of beer levied from the men in the shape of an extra charge. The subject is also, we see, noticed by the local press, with which we quite agree as to the subject of our correspondent's letter. The injustice and impropriety of levying Rs. 500 a month from a regiment for charitable purposes in the shape of an extra charge on their beer are so obvious that the complaint seems scarcely credible. If the entire population of Great Britain contributed at this rate to charitable purposes, the total sum would amount to something like twenty-five millions sterling per annum. The tax upon hawkers and pedlars seems hardly less indefensible.—Englishman.

TEA CULTIVATION IN INDIA.—A public meeting of gentlemen interested in tea cultivation, presided over by Mr. T. H. Wordie, was held in Calcutta on May 26, to consider the propriety of laying before the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal the views of those interested in tea cultivation in India with respect to the measures that ought to be taken by Government to render impossible any further raids on our North-Eastern frontier. The following resolutions were adopted:—1st: "That in the opinion of this meeting no safety or security can be hoped for in the tea districts of Sylhet and Cachar, unless punishment is administered to the hill tribes for past outrages, and that an expedition for this purpose should be sent in the ensuing cold season." 2nd: "That the Lieutenant-Governor be asked to receive a deputation in support of these views, and that Mr. J. R. Bullen Smith be requested to introduce it."

SPORT IN THE MIRZAPORE HILLS.—His Highness the Maharajah of Vizianagram, K.C.S.I., and his son, the Koomar Maharajah, have been entertaining Major Morley and Lieutenant Hickson of "The Buffs," during the past month in a most hospitable manner. The party have been shooting in the Mirzapore district near Chunar, and have made a bag of six tigers, five sambur, two nil-guy, three spotted deer, five pigs, &c. Three of the above tigers were killed in the Puthrelia ravine on the Imelia Estate, in the Mirzapore hills, which is the property of the Maharajah. This ravine is a favourite haunt of the tigers of the district, and has been so constructed by nature that from several parts of it all the movements of the tiger can be distinctly seen. On the Imelia Estate there are several ravines in which are most tempting places for a tiger's lair, and his Highness the Maharajah is making such improvements in them as will ensure good sport to his friends almost at a moment's notice.—Pioneer, May 29.

A CLEVER DODGE.—A certain Mahomedan lad, of Shahjehanpore, being anxious to leave school, hit upon an ingenious expedient by which to accomplish his purpose. The wily urchin informed his parent that he saw a Ferishta (angel) in his dream the night previous, who informed him that should he continue his English studies he would die in a fortnight. The story had the desired effect. His credulous father removed him from school at once.—Mofussilite.

THE NEW SIMLAH MAGAZINE.—We have received the first number of Mountain Echoes, from which it would appear that Simlah during the season has no topics of conversation except religious ones—at any rate, the "Mountains echo" nothing else: that Jakko is resonant of only church-bells. We cannot therefore in these secular columns fitly criticise the contents of the young periodical, but they are as follows:—"Christian Union in British India," by the editor, the Rev J. Fordyce—"Sir David Brewster," a biographical sketch—Two London Letters, devoted entirely to Church matters—"Phases of Unbelief"—"Rome a Year Ago and Now"—"Protestant Churches"—"Symbols and Art in Worship"—"Salvation in Christ"—"Professor Huxley," and some religious "Poetrys."—Pioneer.

NEW PATENTS.—The undermentioned specifications of inventions have been filed in the office of the Secretary to the Government of India in the Home Department, and copies sent to the different provincial Secretariats:—No. 520.—Mr. W. Firth, of Rose Villa, Viewforth, Edinburgh, in the county of Midlothian, in Scotland, Secretary to the North British Rubber Company, Limited, for improvements in the wheels of traction carriages for use on common roads and tramways. No. 542.—Mr. Samuel Cleland Davidson, tea planter, residing at Burkhola, Cachar, for a machine for rolling tea leaf. No. 545.—Mr. Walter West, No. 9, Saint Paul's-road, Camden-town, and Daniel Kemp West, No. 7, Liddlington-place, Oakley-square, both in the county of Middlesex, England, for improvements in machinery for pressing cotton and other materials.

DISCOVERY OF A LEAD MINE.—According to the Oude Ukhbar, a mine of lead traced with silver has been discovered by Newab Mohammed Murdan Ali, Prime Minister of the Maharajah of Joudhpore, in the mountainous territory belonging to that State. The name of the place where the mine exists is not given. The Newab is said to be fond of such scientific researches. When he was in the Punjab in British employ, it is said he discovered a kind of coal which is used in medicine, and a sulphuric oil which has been useful in removing certain diseases. He is also reported to have made several other discoveries, of which he furnished the British Government with specimens. His Highness the Maharajah of Joudhpore was much pleased to hear of the discovery of the lead mine, and it is to be hoped that it will be soon opened.—Mofussilite.

SLAVE DEALING IN SIKHIM.—The Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling is at present engaged investigating certain charges of kidnapping and dealing in slaves by one Achook Kajee, a brother of the Kajee, of Tanlang, in Sikhim. The information was given by Lama of the Pemionchi Goompa. Our former misunderstanding with Sikhim arose in some measure from similar acts to the above, in consequence of which our Envoy, the Hon. Ashley Eden, when drawing up the treaty with Sikhim in 1861, made Clause XV. as follows:—"Inasmuch as many of the late misunderstandings have had their foundation in the custom which exists in Sikhim of dealing in slaves, the Government of Sikhim binds itself from this date to punish severely any person trafficking in human beings, or seizing persons for the purpose of using them as slaves.—Darjeeling News.

MILITARY.—A correspondent, writing from Roorkee on the 21st May, says:—"The Sappers and Miners are at last under orders to proceed to Chukrata. They have been kept in suspense for months past, and now, after getting all preparations for the hot weather made, are ordered off at a moment's notice, in the midst of the hot weather, leaving comfortable quarters for exposure on the Chukrate hills during the rains under canvas, for there is no time to build huts, the rains being at hand. Such treatment speaks for itself."—Delhi Gazette.—A camp of instruction, consisting of no less than three complete divisions, is to be formed at Ghazeeabad in November next, and to last for three months. The Commander-in-Chief will be present during the greater part of the time in command, and the divisions will be under Generals MacMurda, Travers, and Fraser-Tytler.

BOTANICAL.—The prickly poppy (Argemone Mexicana), originally from the New World, has become naturalised throughout the tropics and sub-tropics of both hemispheres. In the West Indies, where it is very abundant, it is called Fico del inferno, the reason for this name being according to Gerarde "because of his fruit which doth much resemble the figge in shape and bignesse but so full of sharpe venemous prickles that whosoever had one of them in his throtte doubtless it would send him packing either to heaven or hell." Barham, however, gives as an explanation a statement that the seeds, "being much stronger than opium," are "enough to send any that should take them wilfully to inferno;" but this is much exaggerated. In this country it is now abundantly naturalised in the eastern part of the Punjab, and is spreading over fresh districts year by year. It is not altogether a useless addition to the Indian flora, as near Delhi an oil, which is used for burning, as well as in the treatment of chronic sores and eruptions, is extracted.—Friend of India.

"THE CHEEZ."—The following appears in the Englishman:—"Sir,—In your article on 'the cheez,' you doubt whether the term is of Indian origin; it certainly is, not being found in vulgar, but in Gipsey slang. They have several other clearly Indian words, of which at this moment I can recall but two, both very expressive. 'He's no great shakes,' shakes being clearly a corruption of shuks; and, 'put him in quod,' quod being equally a corruption of gaed. I am aware that Universities even regard quod as a corruption of quad, short for quadrangle, and that the expression means "confine him to the college quadrangle." But what do Gipsies, with whom the term is familiar, know of colleges or their quadrangles? The subject is interesting, and I trust this note will elicit others.—R. F. H.—Morar, May 21, 1871. P.S.—Equally so Christmas box, or boxes, is a corruption of bukhsh and buksheesh. Properly, the word should be plural with a singular prefix—a Christmas boxes, like a wine-vaults.

A NEW LIFE-PRESERVER.—The police at Akyab have made a discovery there of a new life-preserver, or rather destroyer. It was found on a number of bad characters apprehended at rows in the opium and toddy-shops in the town. It consists, we learn from a contemporary, of a piece of seven-stranded gutta-percha covered wire folded double and lashed along its length at intervals (so as to keep it together), with a loop at the one end, and the other, where the two free ends meet, firmly attached to a large ball of "Chatterton's cabling compound," a substance, when dry, sufficiently hard to comfortably knock one's brains out with. This weapon is worn round the waist like a belt, the ball for a button and the loop for a hole. With this belt on, which may be easily worn without risk of discovery, a blackguard may go into a crowd, and in case of a row use it with frightful effect. The invention reflects credit on the inventors, while the police are to be complimented for their discovery. A soldier's belt is no bad weapon at close quarters, but the Akyab one beats it hollow.

MR. BERNARD AND THE BENGAL CIVILIANS.—The Friend of India maintains Mr. Campbell's right to select for his helpers in the administration of Bengal those in whom he possesses confidence and whom he has already tried:—"The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal is being rather severely called to account for having appointed Mr. Bernard, at the Central Provinces, to a seat in the Bengal Legislature. One correspondent of the Englishman says plainly, that Bengal civilians will not be satisfied till Mr. Bernard is relegated to his place in the Central Provinces. If we are not sadly mistaken in Mr. Campbell's character, Bengal civilians of this type will have to remain dissatisfied. Why it would be simply preposterous to say that a Lieutenant-Governor, new to a division of the empire, should not be free to select a man whom he knows and relies on to help him with his most difficult and responsible duties. Bengal civilians have a right to a fair consideration, but the State has a prior right, and Mr. Bernard will, we believe, bring special information to the Legislative Council, where he unquestionably will find his place."

THE NEW DEPARTMENT.—It has been determined that Mr. A. O. Hume, C.B., shall be the first head of the new Department of Revenue, Agriculture, and Commerce. Mr. Hume will have the rank and title of a Chief Secretary to the Government of India, but his pay will only be Rs. 3,500 a-month, instead of the regulation £5,000 a year. His salary is met by savings proceeding from the more economical distribution of work among the Secretariats, and the new department involves no extra charge to the State. Mr. Geoghegan goes from the Home Office as Under-Secretary upon his former pay. Mr. Rivett-Carnac is attached to the new Department, and in addition to his work as Cotton Commissioner will have other executive duties, principally of inspection, made over to him. Mr. Batten succeeds Mr. A. O. Hume as Commissioner of the Inland Customs, but we sincerely trust that one of the early effects of the new department will be to abolish or to greatly modify the costly and barbarous Customs Line which now stretches across India.—Englishman, May 31.

BOKHARA.—The latest news from Bokhara is extremely interesting. For a long time the relations of the Russian soldiery and the Bakhariots have been growing more and more unsatisfactory, and at last a secret cabal was formed for the expulsion of the strangers. Not so secret, however, but that the Russians got to hear of it, and the King had to fly from Bokhara into Turkistan. The Russians at once took possession of his capital, and sent word to Abdul Rahman, the rebel nephew of the Amir of Cabul, to come and occupy the vacant throne as a vassal of Russia. The adventurer jumped at the offer, and set off at the head of his Afghans to ascend the throne of Bokhara, but without allowing his followers to know whither he was leading them. Very soon, however, the men found out for themselves and were very indignant. The ex-King, they remembered, had always been friendly to Turkistan, so they refused to take part in the confiscation of his kingdom. Abdul Rahman was compelled to submit to the wishes of his followers, and has reluctantly led them back to Turkistan. Meanwhile the Russians occupy Bokhara.—Times of India.

FALL OF HERAT.—A telegram received yesterday from the Foreign Secretary to the Government of India, contains Cabul news up to the 23rd inst. Herat has at last fallen before Sirdar Yacoob Khan, after a severe fight, in which Sirdar Futteh Mahomed Khan, the Ameer's Governor of Cabul, was killed, and his son severely wounded. This news is perfectly authentic, having been forwarded to Cabul by General Feramorz Khan, the Ameer's commander-in-chief, who had proceeded by forced marches from Candahar, to the relief of Herat. General Feramorz evidently is not prepared to measure strength with Sirdar Yacoob Khan, so he has intimated that he will remain in position four days at Sebzwar (seventy miles south of Herat) in order to allow of his army being reinforced by Sirdar Aslum Khan, Governor of Candahar. The advancing force under Sirdar Aslum Khan is, we presume, that despatched from Cabul to aid the Candahar and Herat forces. But it, as well as the Candahar force, has been outmarched and outgeneraled by Sirdar Yacoob Khan. Under these circumstances, there may well be activity in the recruiting centres at Cabul. The Persians will rejoice over the death of Futteh Mahomed; he was no friend of theirs.—Times of India.

AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.—Some short time ago a discovery was made on the Jubbulpore line of a metallic oxide capable of being made into a first-class paint. We learn now that it has been adopted by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway for bridge work, &c.; by the East Indian Railway for locomotives, carriages, &c.; and by many other firms or companies for different purposes. Since the discovery mills have been erected and machinery started for the purpose of grinding and manufacturing it, on a scale sufficient to meet the more immediate demands; but owing to its extremely moderate cost, it is probable that it will be adopted in India generally, almost to the exclusion of expensive European paints. The natural colour is a rich chocolate or maroon; but mixed with other pigments it will produce shades from pale cream to bright red, and so on to a deep brown. Used as distemper, under the tasteful direction of Mr. Thomas, C.E., the church at Jubbulpore has been decorated with it in various tints with good results. Arrangements are being made, we believe, for establishing a depot in Allahabad to supply the North-West and Punjab.—Pioneer.

THE FURLOUGH RULES.—This week brings good news for the services. The Secretary of State's now celebrated Furlough Despatch has turned out to have been founded on a misconception. It originated in a startling rise in the disbursements at the India-office to members of the services on leave. But the Whitehall accountants omitted to consider that this increase was simply due to the fact that officers who remained in India and acted for the absentees were mulcted of a considerable part of the full salary of their appointments. In short, what the India-office disbursed to the absentees in England the Indian Government retrenched from the salaries of the men who officiated for them in India. As a matter of fact, there has been, it is said, a net saving to Government from this arrangement amounting to about £15,000 in the Military Department, and although the sudden introduction of the rules has abnormally stimulated furloughs in the Civil Service, yet the grand total of both departments shows a saving. In a year or two the civil furloughs will fall to their ordinary level, and the new rules will prove economical to Government as well as beneficial to the service. These facts were patent to officers at home as soon as the real tenor of the despatch became known. Deep was the murmuring at No. 14, St. James's-square; but the answer was so obvious that the danger seems to have passed off. When our correspondent wrote the opinion of those best informed was that the proposals contained in the despatch would not be further pressed by the India Office.—Englishman, May 31.

MR. BERNARD'S APPOINTMENT.—The following Foreign Department notification, dated May 19, appears in the Gazette of India:—"The services of Mr. C. E. Bernard, B.C.S., Commissioner of the Nagpore Division, in the Central Provinces, are placed, as a temporary measure, at the disposal of the Home Department for employment as an official member of the Council of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal for making laws and regulations." "The discussion closes here," as a contemporary said on Monday to the Bengal civilians who were bothering him with letters on the subject of Mr. Bernard's appointment, notwithstanding the assurances of the journalist in question that it was "all right;" and that, as they must have seen, the journalist himself was evidently of opinion that the "least said on the matter the soonest mended." Seriously, however, the words "as a temporary measure" in the above order should have their weight with the local civilians, and cause them to see that which they—and the Press—have hitherto overlooked, viz., that if Mr. Campbell had not applied for the temporary services of Mr. Bernard he would have had for his Financial Minister, in framing the new local measures, and carrying them through Council, the redoubtable Mr. V. Schalch, his senior in the service (by two months twelve days), and gifted with a mind of his own not remarkably pliable at the dictation of others. Mr. Schalch is a highly estimable gentleman, but considering the way he wilfully set at nought the wishes of the local corporation in the drawing up and care of the municipal Bills entrusted to his charge, we cannot say that it is to be regretted that Mr. Bernard, and not he, will have charge of the very important local measures now on the Bengal legislative anvil. Mr. Campbell's manner in Council shows that he loves peace and quietness, and he probably felt that he would not have an abundance of either with Mr. Schalch and his Legislative Prime Minister, and it is not at all unlikely that in so thinking his Honour was correct.—Examiner, May 26.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, May 27.—The very short interval between this and the last preceding mail leaves very little to comment on. The import market continued very dull indeed, business being almost suspended, owing to the reports of more failures being expected among the piece goods dealers.

JUNE 3.—After our last the market showed some symptoms of improvement, and it was hoped that the difficulties which stood in the way of business were about to be removed, and confidence restored. The past two days have, however, witnessed another reaction, and the position of business is quite as bad as at date of our last. Those dealers who are in a position to buy prefer not to do so at present, and importers, on their part, have stopped sales of goods until these can be effected with a greater degree of safety. In the TWIST market there has been some inquiry, and a fair business has resulted in 40's at rather firmer rates.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, May 27.—As to exports, the weather has remained favourable, and abundant crops of every description of produce may be looked for this year. SEEDS and HIDES have been dealt in to some extent. SILK remains very depressed, the reports of the home markets being most unsatisfactory. TEA is in good demand, but, as usual at this season of the year, buyers are endeavouring to come in at lower prices. JUTE has not begun to come down yet, but supplies will be very early and abundant this year. JUTE.—Messrs. Balmer, Lawrie, and Co. write, under date Calcutta, May 24, as follows:—Our market for Jute continues quiet, and without change in prices; many buyers are in the market, but they hesitate to operate in the face of the high rates demanded for freight. Cheap lots are, therefore, occasionally to be met with, but they are promptly taken up by exporters when found. On the banks of the Luckia and Berhampooter rivers the extent of land under cultivation was in some cases double, and in some treble that of last year. The plant looked healthy, and was from two to six inches in height; part of the land being of a high level, could not be sown until some heavy rains came, about the end of April and beginning of May. On the banks of the Megna there are large quantities of standing Jute; the villagers had sown double the acreage of last year. In this district the sowing was earlier than in that of Luckia and Berhampooter, the land being low and damp, and the plant is some three to four feet in height. Our agent fears that much of this year's Jute will be of inferior quality as compared with that of last year.

JUNE 3.—RICE: The demand for white continues steady at from Rs. 3-6 to 3-8 and for middling Rs. 2-10 to 2-12. RAPESEED: There has been again a rise in prices, and the supply of yellow is not equal to the demand. We quote Rs. 4-14 to 5-3 for this description. POPPYSEED: The reports of damage to the new crop are confirmed, and holders stand out for higher rates, which has prevented business; Rs. 4-8 to 4-10 is now asked. RAW SILK: Though the sales during the week have only amounted to 116 bales, holders both of filatures and native have had to give way in their prices from 8 to 12 annas; Rangamatty sold at Rs. 21-10, Cossimbazar at Rs. 21-8, Nimtollah at Rs. 17-8 to 18-4, and Sircar at Rs. 17.

BURMAH.—Our news from Mandalay brings us up to March 11, the day on which Major MacMahon made over charge of the Political Agency to Captain Strover. The King seemed to regret sincerely Major MacMahon's departure, as indeed his Majesty has good cause to do, for since that officer assumed political charge many improvements have been introduced into the administration of the country. The telegraph office is now working admirably, the gun foundry turns out very serviceable weapons, and ship-building has been undertaken on a large scale. The trade on the river has vastly augmented, and local manufactures have received, by the liberal policy adopted by Major MacMahon's advice, a very satisfactory impulse.—Pioneer, May 26.

A MADRAS MATRIMONIAL CASE.—One of the members of our local bar, Mr. Green, who recently brought a suit for a divorce against his wife, has, we understand, given notice that he has withdrawn the suit. He has further given notice that he has embraced the Mahommedan faith, and taken the name of Abdoolah. This is a very simple mode in which many young Benedicts might simplify domestic difficulties. His unfortunate wife has, through her solicitors, applied for alimony. The issue of this case will afford hints both to husbands and wives, and perhaps also to members of the bar, who will have to consider as to what rules should be established for the protection of the reputation of the bar in India.—Madras Athenæum, May 31.

THE 19TH MADRAS N.I.—Colonel Cholmeley, late Commandant; Lieutenant Colonels Firth and Bowen, late wing officers; and Captain Atkinson, late Adjutant of the 19th N.I., returned to Madras from the Straits yesterday. Their troubles are not yet over, for the local Government, we regret to say, have determined to disband the No. 1 Company of the 19th N.I. with ignominy. The 104 sepoys who arrived with the above officers are now encamped on the Light House Esplanade under a guard, and when their pay accounts have been settled there is to be a general parade on the island, of all the corps in garrison under the command of the officer commanding the Centre Division, when the Government order will be read and the company disbanded. And all this severity—this adding of insult to injury—because the commandant was "inexcusably weak."—Madras Mail, June 3.

SECUNDERABAD.—The news from Secunderabad steadily improves. On Monday there were ten fresh cases among the 18th Hussars and one death. On Tuesday there were no deaths. Since the outbreak to Wednesday there had been fifty-nine cases and twenty-seven deaths. Dr. Popham, of the 76th Regiment, was ordered to the Hussar camp for duty on Monday. The reason why puzzles every one except the Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals, as, at the time Dr. Popham was sent, the services of two staff assistant-surgeons were available. The despatching a regimental surgeon to the camp under the circumstances has much increased, we are told, the dissatisfaction felt regarding the proceedings of the deputy inspector-general. Our correspondent hopes soon to send us the satisfactory information that all is well. There have been but two cases in the bazaar since our last information, and only one or two deaths.—Madras Athenæum, June 3.

A COURT-MARTIAL.—We learn that on the 27th of last month Lieutenant Beresford, of the 1-5th Brigade of Royal Artillery, stationed at Saint Thomas Mount, disobeyed the orders of his superior officer by not attending parade after having been duly warned. A court of enquiry was held to enquire into the conduct of Lieutenant Beresford, and it has now been decided to try him by a court-martial. The Brigadier-General Commanding Centre Division has ordered a general court-martial to be held on Thursday next, the 1st proximo, at the main guard of Fort St. George, for the trial of Lieutenant Beresford on a charge of wilful disobedience of orders. Colonel Batten, of the 17th Regiment Native Infantry, has been appointed as the president, and he will be assisted by twelve other officers as members.—Madras Athenæum, May 29. [The trial has been postponed sine die on account of the illness of Lieutenant Beresford.] Colonel MacCullum, Deputy Judge Advocate of Bangalore, has been appointed to conduct the prosecution at the court-martial.

THE LATE MR. R. C. HART.—We regret to record the death, yesterday, at the age of 65, of Mr. Robert C. Hart, a well known and respected member of the East Indian community. The deceased gentleman had been, we believe, connected almost from the foundation with the Civil Orphan Asylums, and was till lately a director of those institutions.—Madras Athenæum, May 24.

NATIVE ASSESSORS.—The value of native assessors was well exemplified in a late murder case in the Sessions Court of Pegu. Although great pains were taken to explain the evidence, and although the evidence was purposely given in Burmese, they found the prisoner "Not guilty"—because they had not seen the girl die! Colonel Ardagh, however, differed from them, and transported the murderer for life.

ANOTHER ROYAL VISIT.—The Grand Duke Alexis-Alexandrovitch, third son of the Emperor of Russia, may be expected in India about September next. His Imperial Highness is to sail from Cronstadt about the middle of this month in an Imperial yacht, accompanied by an escort of four or five vessels of the Russian navy, and that will probably reach New York early in the month of June. The New York Times states that "the Diplomatic Corps, and particularly the Russian Legation, are busily engaged in preparing a programme of festivities, which, in conjunction with those in course of preparation by the United States Government, together with the hospitalities that will doubtless be freely offered by New York and the larger cities throughout the Union, will combine to form a succession of grand ovations that will probably surpass in point of real magnificence anything of the kind this country has ever witnessed." It is stated that after a rapid tour through the Eastern, Middle, and Western States, and a journey across the Continent to San Francisco, it is surmised at the Russian Legation that the tourist will cross the Pacific, and traversing the immense empire of Russia on the continents of Asia and Europe, reach St. Petersburg some time in October.—Madras Mail, May 30.

A BENEVOLENT PARSEE.—On Saturday morning a deputation, consisting of Messrs. Dinshaw Manockjee Petit and Merwanjee Framjee Panday, on behalf of the Committee of the "Fund for Ameliorating the Condition of the Poor Zoroastrians in Persia," waited on Mr. Cowasjee Jehangir Readymoney, C.S.I., to solicit his patriotic assistance on behalf of their suffering fellow-countrymen. Mr. Cowasjee at once subscribed Rs. 10,000 towards the relief of the oppressive zajeera tax on the Parsees of Persia, and a further sum of Rs. 1,000 for the famine relief purposes.—Times of India, June 6.

PUNCH MAHALS.—A correspondent writes to us from Dohad, Punch Mahals, Gujerat, on the 2nd instant:—"The weather here has been simply delicious. No heat; and a blanket necessary at night. During the late curious weather we had a few dust-storms and a little rain. Dohad is nearly half-way between Baroda and Indore or Mhow, and is in the heart of the Bheel country. We have our little 'witch-swingings' up here. There are a policeman, a doctor, and myself in Dohad, and 200 men of the Gujerat Bheel Corps, also a jail. The other night a panther walked round the house and garden." Bombay Gazette, June 6.

RETURN OF THE S. S. "DALHOUSIE."—The steamer Dalhousie, Captain Hewlett, arrived in harbour on June 5, after an unsuccessful cruize in search of the wreck, part of which was reported to have been seen by the Cromwell. The Dalhousie left Bombay on Saturday, so that she has spent nine days on the expedition. Arrived near the point which the Cromwell reported, she cruised about for several days, heaving to each night, but two ships in good trim and two birds were all that was seen—not even a package or a stray bale of cotton was visible. The Dalhousie had fine weather all the time she was out, except on Saturday last. She was then off the coast near Carwar, which port she put into for a short time.

THE PORT OF BOMBAY.—There is an appointment of considerable importance which has not yet been filled up—that of Master Attendant of the Port of Bombay. No great harm is done by keeping an empty place in Council during this holiday season; but, as the shipping trade of Bombay takes no holidays, and never a day passes in which the services of the master attendant may not be urgently needed, the prolonged delay in appointing a successor to Mr. Pryce cannot be justified. It is rumoured that the intention of Government is to unite the offices of the superintendent of marine and master attendant under the provisions of the Bill which Colonel Kennedy has prepared, and will introduce in the Legislative Council next month, for establishing a new Port Trust. But it will be a long time before this Bill can become law; and, for the sake of the shipping, it seems desirable to appoint an officer to discharge the duties of master attendant, pending other arrangements.—Bombay Gazette.

WARRANT OFFICERS.—G. G. O. No. 380, dated Bombay Castle 23rd May, 1871, says that—"It is to be clearly understood that no warrant officer can, under any circumstances, obtain leave eastward of the Cape on Indian pay and allowances, as granted to commissioned officers, under the rules of 1796." The above order appears in the last Government Gazette, and is evidently intended as the first blow by which the warrant rank is to be abolished. This is certainly not in accordance with the guarantee under which warrant officers consented to transfer their services from the East India Company's to the British Army. By that guarantee they were promised that the pay, pension, and privileges they enjoyed under the old rules should be continued to them; and the old rules, those of the East India Company, placed warrant officers in point of privileges on a footing with commissioned officers, as any one knows who is versed in the pages of Jameson's Code.—Times of India.

THE FIFTY-FIVE YEARS RULE.—The "fifty years order" threatens to become a great mystery. It is to be desired some competent authority would clearly explain whether the said order was originally promulgated as a Procrustean rule, or merely as a sort of regulating power to be applied now and then so as to relieve the dispensers of patronage from occasional perplexity. Certainly, since it has been attempted to apply the order, the number of fine old Indians in an excellent state of preservation seems to have increased in the land. We observe that a correspondent at Nassick has discovered one of those striking exceptions which, we suppose, go to "prove" the fifty-five years rule. The instance referred to is that of Hon. Assistant-Surgeon B. Burn, in medical charge of Civil Station at Nassick. A medico who can ride forty miles before breakfast, and indulge in the light but exciting dissipation of croquet the same evening, must have a good deal of work in him yet. And while the claims of promotion may require the removal of such from the active list of his own service, there must be various confidential posts wherein tested character and life-long experience would be worth much more to the State than the amount of pension claimable by such.—Times of India.

DR. FORBES.—Dr. G. F. C. Forbes, the cotton commissioner, who is now leaving Bombay under a six months' furlough, nearly heads the list of surgeon-majors on the Bombay Medical Service. His commission as assistant-surgeon is dated March, 1841, so that he has seen thirty years' service. He has had scarcely any furlough or private leave, so that he must be nearly within reach of the highest rate of pension. It has been supposed by some that the Doctor still looks to obtaining promotion in his own service; but after having been so long out of practice in the matter of prescriptions and potions—more than a dozen years—he can scarcely expect to attain a higher degree as a medico. His public services during his more active years may entitle him to brevet rank as deputy inspector-general, if he prefer that to C.S.I.; but there can be no chance of his being placed on the active list of deputy inspector-generals, in any way to interfere with the due promotion of his comrades. They have bided their time in their own line while the Doctor was winning a name for himself in Dharwar, and having a better salary than others of the same rank in the service. We trust the energetic Doctor will obtain any honorary rank and pension to which his special merits and length of service entitle him; but we also trust there will not be any check given to the promotion of those who have remained in the Medical Department.—Times of India.

A FIGHT WITH ARABS NEAR ADEN.—A small tribe of Arabs near Aden have been giving trouble lately, stopping kafilas bound for that place, levying blackmail, ill-treating people, and otherwise misbehaving. In consequence, on the 6th April last the Aden troop, under Captain Stevens, the commandant, was sent out with orders to make a sudden march, surprise and attack the tribe, and bring in the principal chiefs as prisoners. The troop marched on the morning of the 6th to Lahedj, about eighteen miles, and moved from thence to Bir Ahmed, fifteen miles, the same evening. On the evening of the 7th they started for Kustrah, the principal village of the refractory tribe. The distance was said to be thirty-six miles, but was in reality about thirty-nine. They marched all night and reached their destination a little before daybreak on the 8th. When it was light they advanced on the village, but found the Arabs on the look-out. These latter were posted favourably on a ridge, and where a knoll at one corner formed a sort of natural bastion, with a steep acclivity on the two sides nearest the troop. This knoll was surrounded by a fence (about breast high), made of branches, &c. On being summoned to lay down their arms, the Arabs made a pretence of parleying, but it was evidently a ruse to gain time. At last their head-man answered, "They would rather die than surrender," so the troop was ordered to attack them. The Arabs were quite outnumbered, but fought desperately. Nine of their party were killed, two taken prisoners (one of these badly wounded), and some few escaped. Amongst the killed was the leader of the party, Mahomed bin Shurwet, a ruffian of the deepest dye, and who had been the terror of the neighbourhood for years past. The casualties on the side of the Aden troops were three sowars wounded, one horse killed (over exertion), and five horses and one camel wounded. That afternoon they reached Dhuremea en route to Aden. From the time they left Bir Ahmed, on the evening of the 7th, till they arrived at Dhuremea, on the 8th, they had been over twenty hours in the saddle, and during that time had covered seventy-eight miles of bad country. Taking into consideration the nature of the ground traversed, and the heat of the weather, we should say that this is a feat that has been seldom, if ever, surpassed. The nearest approach to it that we can remember is the march of the cavalry and horse artillery to the relief of Kirwee in 1858.—Pioneer, May 23.

FREIGHTS.

To Liverpool—Cotton and Wool, £2. 15s. Seeds, £1. 15s. to £2.
To London—Cotton, £3 to £3. 2s. 6d.; Seeds, £3 to £3. 2s. 6d.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, May 30.—GREY Goods show no material change, one or two descriptions, however, being somewhat steadier. SHIRTINGS: We have only a few transactions to report. PRINTERS continue quiet. LONG CLOTHS are dull; sales, 36-inch, 36 yards in 7 lbs., in 8 lbs., and in 9 lbs., all at 9 annas per lb. JACONETS: 45-inch, 2½ lbs., Rs. 2-7. YARNS: Grey—The demand continues active, and prices generally are very firm; Turkey Red—a good demand continues for the interior.

JUNE 6.—A very small business has again been done in PIECE GOODS in the period under review, which is accounted for by the approach of the south-west monsoon, and by the circumstance of many of the buyers for the interior having returned to their native countries for the rains; but in consequence of an improvement in the Liverpool Cotton Market, an advance of one anna per piece has taken place in GREY SHIRTINGS. In GREY YARNS a considerable business has been done at an advance, generally of about ¼ to ½ anna per lb.; and in TURKEY RED TWIST the inquiry noticed in our last report continues, with a further advance of ¼ anna per lb.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, May 30.—COTTON: In consequence of telegrams from Liverpool, the market here was somewhat weaker yesterday, and a decline of about Rs. 2 to 5 per candy may be quoted. In the last two days the purchases on European account made in Bombay, for export, aggregate about 5,000 bales. The market closes quiet, but steady. Below we append our quotations, viz.:—

	New.	Per candy.
Dhollera and Bhownuggur	Rs. 183 to 185
Comrawuttee	175 180
Dharwar Sawginned	190

JUNE 6.—An advance in Liverpool has been followed by an advance of Rs. 12 to 15 per candy in the prices here of New Dholleral and Darwar saw-ginned. The business done for export on European account in Bombay has not been very large, amounting to about 22,000 bales only. The purchases were principally in the following descriptions, viz., 10,000 bales of New Dhollera and Bhownuggur, at Rs. 181 to 197 per candy; 2,500 bales of Dharwar saw-ginned, at Rs. 195 to 209 per candy; 2,200 bales of Vingorla, at Rs. 169 to 178 per candy; and 1,000 bales of Comrawuttee, at Rs. 173 to Rs. 180.

EXCHANGE.—Documents, on which £6 and £7 per bale are advanced, Is. 11⅞d. Demand Bills on London at 10d., and 60 days' sight, on China, at Rs. 223 per 100 dollars.

GOVERNMENT PAPER.—An improvement has taken place in all descriptions, and the market closes strong, at an advance of ¼ per cent.

SHARES.—Land, Bank, and Press Companies' Shares remain unaltered. In Spinning Shares the more encouraging telegrams received regarding the Liverpool Cotton market induced several holders to enter the market as sellers, and a decline in most of the shares of this description has taken place; Alliance stand at Rs. 2,770, Manockjee Petit at Rs. 1,090, and Great Eastern at Rs. 2,190; and sales at these rates could not be effected.

COURT-MARTIAL.

CAPT. R. A. DOBBIN, LATE 6TH REGIMENT EUROPEAN INFANTRY.

At a general Court Martial, at Moradabad, on March 2 (Col. S. Richards, President), Capt. R. A. Dobbin, of the late 6th regt. European inf., and doing duty with 32nd regt. N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

With conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in the following instances:—

1st. In having, in the camp of the head quarters wing of the 32nd regt. N.I., at Komaria, on the night of Dec. 17, 1870, been drunk and violent, and created a disturbance in camp.

2nd. In having quitted camp at Komaria, on Dec. 18, 1870, and remained absent from it, without permission, until Dec. 19, 1870.

The Court found him guilty, and sentenced him to be dismissed from her Majesty's service.

The proceedings of the Court have been approved and confirmed by Lord Napier of Magdala, the C. in C. in India. The name of Capt. Dobbin was to be struck off the returns of the army from the date on which the order of the C. in C. might be read to him, and a report of the same date was to be made to the adj. gen. by the officer commanding at Meerut.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

PAY OF UNEMPLOYED OFFICERS.

Simla, May 15.—No. 441.—The practice of ncti fying in general orders the station at which an unemployed general officer, or an officer in receipt of colonel's allowance, is permitted to reside, and the pay office at which he will draw his pay, will be discontinued, and hereafter the notification in general order of the return of any such officer to India will be sufficient authority for the issue of his pay in this country from any military pay office on his producing his last pay certificate.

2. An officer, who has drawn his pay in any pay circle, desiring to change his place of residence beyond the limits of such circle, must apply to the paymaster for a last pay certificate, notifying at the same time the pay circle to which he desires to be transferred. The paymaster, when issuing the last pay certificate, will communicate the transfer to the paymaster of the circle to which the officer is proceeding, and from whom he will obtain his next pay on production of the last pay certificate. Each officer is required to report, on January 1, his place of residence, and to notify at once each change as it occurs to the Adjutant-general.

3. A general officer, wishing to reside in another presidency, should apply to the controller of military accounts of his own presidency, in order to the issue of instructions regarding the adjustment of his pay and allowances, while he may continue to reside out of the presidency to which he belongs.

CIVIL SERVICE LEAVE.

April 21.—No. 50.—The Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct that rule 3 under section XXXVI. of the Covenanted Civil Service Leave Code be struck out, and that the following rule be added as No. 3 to chapter 13 of that code:—"An officer permitted to return to duty before the expiry of his leave should have the unused part of his leave formally cancelled by the authority which granted it." This rule applies generally.

RETURN HOME OF THE 22ND BRIGADE R.A.

Head Quarters, Simla, May 30.—Instructions having been received for the head quarters and batteries of the 22nd brigade Royal Artillery to proceed to England next cold season, the non-commissioned officers, artificers, and men desirous of extending their services in this country will be allowed to volunteer for the Royal Artillery serving in any of the Presidencies.

The non-commissioned officers and artificers volunteering to remain in India will take rank in the brigade to which they may be posted, according to the dates of their promotion.

It is to be understood that men remaining in the country may select their Presidency, but are not to be allowed to volunteer for any particular brigade or battery.

COLONEL STRACHEY, R.E.—THANKS OF GOVERNMENT.

The following resolution is published in the Gazette of India for general information:—

On the occasion of the departure from India of Col. Strachey, H.E. the Viceroy and Gov. gen. in Council desires me to convey to that officer the thanks of the British Government for the valuable services he has rendered to British India during a long series of years, and more especially during his late tenure of the offices of inspector gen. of irrigation and Sec. to the Government of India in the P.W.D.

2. The Government of India is greatly indebted to Col. Strachey's exertions during his previous tenure of office, both as Under Secretary and Secretary, in regard to the measures taken for the prosecution of the great works of irrigation now in progress, and considers that his services, more recently rendered in completing the arrangements and perfecting the organisation of this branch of the P.W.D., deserve the highest acknowledgments of the Government of India. Col. Strachey has also the satisfaction of witnessing the progress made in designing and executing the many large works which have now been undertaken in all parts of the country.

3. In devising the means for the future extension of the railway system in India by direct Government agency, the Governor-General in Council has received from Colonel Strachey most valuable advice and assistance, and his Excellency in Council trusts that he will soon have the satisfaction of knowing that the works under this branch of the department are in as active progress as those designed for irrigation.

4. Besides these special services, H.E. in Council has to acknowledge the ready manner in which Colonel Strachey's great ability and untiring energy have ever been placed at the disposal of the Government, in the Legislative Council, and in many other ways both connected and unconnected with the Public Works Department.

5. H.E. in Council trusts that Col. Strachey's talents and experience may still be in some fitting manner made available to the interests of India; but if this should unfortunately not be possible, still he has already rendered such great services as to leave lasting marks of his brilliant official career in India, and to establish a permanent claim to the gratitude of the Government of this country.

6. Col. Strachey's services have been so conspicuous, his ability so rare, and his departure from India is such a loss to the public service, that the Gov. gen. in Council feels it proper to record his acknowledgments of these services in the form of a Resolution of the Government, to be published in the Gazette of India.

ORDER.—Ordered that a copy of this Resolution be forwarded to Col. Strachey through the Secretary of State, and also that it be published in the Gazette of India.

LEGAL.—The following candidates are declared qualified for admission as Pleaders of Courts subordinate to Chief Court:—Messrs. H. Thompson and J. B. Mullins.

Davidson, assistant engineer, attached to the Kanhan div. of the P.W.D., has passed the colloquial examination in Hindustani; June 3. The following officers are reported by the Central Examination Committee to have passed in the subjects mentioned against their names at the examination held in May, viz.:—Mr. Robert Cornish, judicial officer, in Bengali, by the Lower Standard; he has still to pass in revenue by that standard. Mr. C. A. Fisher, Political officer, in Bengali, by the Higher Standard. Mr. F. C. Channing, assistant commissioner, with great credit; Mr. R. Clarke, assistant commissioner, with credit; Mr. W. Jenkyns, assistant commissioner; Mr. C. Bird, assistant commissioner, subject to further examination in the vernacular; Mr. G. W. Rivaz, assistant commissioner—by the Higher Standard. Lieut. R. Warburton, assistant commissioner; Lieut. C. F. Massy, assistant commissioner; Mr. G. Lewis, B.A., officiating extra assistant commissioner; Mr. C. E. Gladstone, assistant commissioner; Mr. T. Troward, assistant commissioner—by the Lower Standard.

OPIUM SALES.—Notice has been given that the sixth sale of opium, the provision of 1869-70, would be held at the Government Opium Saleroom, No. 2, Bankshall-street, on June 5, 1871, and would comprise 4,330 chests, viz.:—

COURTS-MARTIAL.—Private Terence Mulligan, of the 41st (Welsh) Regiment, was tried at a general court-martial at Mooltan, on April 4, for insubordination, accompanied with personal violence, in having, at Mooltan, struck with his clenched fist Corporal Joseph Woolford, 41st Regiment, the said corporal being his superior officer, and being in the execution of his duty. He was also charged with having, when a prisoner in the regimental cells, wilfully damaged one cot, the property of Government, to the amount of four annas, and a wall of cell to the amount of six annas. The Court sentenced the prisoner to suffer penal servitude for the term of five years, and to be put under stoppages of pay until he shall have made good the sum of ten annas. Approved and confirmed. —At a district court-martial, at Shahjehanpore, on April 15 (Capt. W. H. Henzell, president), Passed Hospital Apprentice W. A. O'Meally, subordinate medical department, attached to 2nd battalion 1st Royals, was charged with having, on March 14, 1871, been drunk when on duty at the hospital, 2nd battalion (The Royal Regiment), at Shahjehanpore. He was found guilty, and sentenced to be suspended from rank, pay, and allowances for one month, and also to be reduced thirty-six places on the list of hospital apprentices. The Commander-in-Chief remarks on the case—"Not confirmed, the sentence being inadequate to the offence committed. I therefore order Hospital Apprentice W. A. O'Meally to be dismissed the service."

TREASURE CHESTS.—It having come to the notice of the Commander-in-Chief that in many instances captains of troops and companies have inadequate means of keeping their troop and compauy's money in security, his Excellency is pleased to direct that the commanding officer of every regiment shall at once arrange for having a strong chest made for the purpose. This chest will be fitted with as many boxes as there are troops or companies, each box to have the letter of the troop or company to which it belongs painted on it, and a lock of its own differing from all the other locks. The lid of the chest will be fitted with open bars or a grating, so that the sentries on relief may be able to hand over the number of boxes in the chest without the necessity of opening it. The chest will be placed in the quarter-guard, with the paymaster's treasure chest, under the same double sentries as are provided for the latter. The key of the chest will be in possession of the senior non-commissioned officer of the guard, who will not allow any non-commissioned officer to remove or open any box without a written order from the officer commanding the troop or company to which it belongs, which order should remain in his possession as a voucher. On the march the chest will be in charge of the paymaster's treasure-chest guard. The expense of the chest will be borne by officers commanding troops and companies in equal proportions.

NEW LINE OF STEAMERS FOR INDIA.—Messrs. Green, the celebrated shipowners, so long known for their passenger ships via the Cape of Good Hope to India, are about to enter the field of competition opened by the Suez Canal. Though late in coming to this decision, the delay has enabled them to avoid the objections made to some of the steamers employed in the Canal trade, and which have, to a certain extent, rendered this route unpopular. Their first ship, the Viceroy, has been designed specially to meet the new conditions imposed upon all vessels seeking to carry on with success the direct passenger and cargo traffic between this country and India. It is sought in the Viceroy, to combine with good speed and capacity for carrying, such accommodation for passengers as the nature of the voyage demands. Her dimensions are as follows: length, 320 feet; breadth, 38 feet; depth, 31 feet; height between decks, 8 feet; tonnage, 2,225; draft of water (loaded), 20 feet. She will be driven by engines by Messrs. Ravenhill and Co., the well-known makers, on the combined principle, with one high and one low pressure cylinder working up to 1,200-horse-power. She is built under special survey, and will class 100 A1 at Lloyds. She will be rigged with three masts, and her canvas will be chiefly fore and aft, thereby avoiding the great drawback experienced by square-rigged ships when steaming head to wind. A large saloon on deck amidships, in addition to one below, is fitted for the accommodation of a hundred first-class passengers, and these, together with the sleeping cabins, being placed before the engines, will secure thorough ventilation and avoid the heat, annoyances, and vibration experienced in cabins abaft the engines. It will be observed that this arrangement places the passengers in the centre, and consequently steadiest, part of the ship. Messrs. Greens' name will doubtless be considered a sufficient guarantee that all the internal details of the ship will be carried out in a thoroughly liberal and efficient manner. The Viceroy will be commanded by Captain J. H. Taylor, late of the Renown, and is to leave for Madras and Calcutta on the 25th September next.

INDIAN APPEAL CASES.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council met on the 24th ult., and heard Indian appeals.

(Present—The LORDS JUSTICES, Sir J. COLVILE, Sir J. NAPIER, and Sir L. PEEL.)

LALLA BUNSEEDHAR V. THE GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the late Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Agra, dated January 24, 1861, which affirmed a decree of the Civil Court of Mirzapore, North-Western Provinces, dated June 18, 1858. The appellant had been surety for one Sree Kisben Chowbey (deceased), the late treasurer of the Mirzapore Collectorate, who was alleged to be a defaulter to the Government of Rs. 60,358 (46,847 principal and 13,511 interest), and for whom the appellant had been security.

The case was opened by Sir Roundell Palmer. The appeal, which had been pending for a number of years, was to reverse the decisions mentioned, on the ground that evidence had been improperly received by the two Courts, and that it had not been proved that the deficiency was caused through embezzlement or misappropriation on the part of Sree Kisben or any other person for whom the appellant had given bonds or was liable as surety.

The appeal was decided on the 27th ult. The question was whether the appellant was liable to the Government as surety for one Sree Kushen Chowdry, deceased, who was a treasurer to the collectorate, and was alleged to be a defaulter to upwards of 46,000 rupees. After counsel on both sides had been heard, Lord Justice Mellish pronounced judgment; he said their lordships recommended the appeal be dismissed with costs.

The appeal KURALLE PERSAND MISR v. AMURTORAM HAJRA was on Wednesday dismissed with costs.

The appeal case ANUNDOMOYEE DOSSEE v. DHONENDRO CHUNDER was heard and adjourned.

On Thursday the case of ANUNDOMOYEE DOSSEE v. DHONENDRO CHUNDER came before the Committee for judgment. It was an appeal from the Presidency of Bengal, and related to the purchase of some property under a decree, and the Statute of Limitations was raised in the litigation. The appeal had been some years pending. Their lordships were of opinion that the judgment of the Court below was right, and, therefore, the present appeal would be dismissed with costs.

The future sittings will not take place until after the long vacation, when they will be conducted, under the new Act, by a special bench of judges. Considerable progress has been made by the Judicial Committee with the eighty-six appeals set down for hearing in the last month, but there are still far too many cases pending to satisfy the people of India.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

The meeting which closed the session on Monday evening, the 26th ult., and which was held in the Hall of the University of London, discussed two papers by the Oriental travellers, Captain Harcourt and Major Sladen. The papers were read after the reading of a letter from Sir R. Murchison, giving Dr. Kirk's views of Livingstone's position as communicated in a recent letter from Zanzibar, dated April 30 last. The communication of Captain A. F. P. Harcourt was on the districts of Kooloo, Lahoul, and Spiti, in Northern India; the second paper read being by Major Sladen on an exploration between the Irrawady and South-western China. Major Sladen's paper was founded on the official narrative, published by him, of an expedition recently made for the purpose of exploring the trade route from India to China, via Bhamo. Major Sladen, Political Agent at Mandalay, on the occasion of the second Treaty being ratified between the British Government and the King of Burmah, seized upon the opportunity to obtain the consent of the King to the despatch of a party of British officers to explore the whole caravan route between the upper waters of the Irrawady and the South-western confines of Hunan. The King's consent to the expedition being accorded, the travellers proceeded on their journey, but considerable delay occurred at the outset in crossing the Kakhyen hills. The opposition of the tribes, however, proved in one sense advantageous, as it enabled Major Sladen to obtain considerable information about the Kakhyens, who, holding the hills, must always form an important element in any scheme for re-opening the route. The travellers afterwards succeeded by the direct encouragement and support of the Panthay Government in advancing as far as Momein, the frontier town of Hunan. The results of the exploration proved (vide report of Mr. Gordon, the engineer officer) that between Bhamo and Momein no physical difficulties of any kind existed to the construction either of a good road, of a tramway, or of a railway. The visit of Major Sladen and his party having proved that no insuperable difficulties presented themselves to political and commercial relations with the China frontier towns, it was the present object to follow up the expedition by sending a British agent to Bhamo to strengthen the favourable impressions made there on behalf of the peaceful aims of British commerce.

The discussion which followed the reading of the two papers was participated in by Sir Donald McLeod, the late Lieut.-Governor of the Punjab (who spoke elucidatory of points in Captain Harcourt's paper on Northern India), and the following gentlemen, viz., Sir Arthur Phayre, General Fytche (Commissioner of British Burmah), Colonel H. Yule, Mr. T. T. Cooper (author of the work "A Journey through Western China towards India"), Sir John Bowring, and others. Sir Arthur Phayre's great and officially acquired knowledge of Burmah contributed information on the subject of the Burman frontier which bore directly on Sladen's expedition to Bhamo. Mr. T. T. Cooper's reminiscences of his travels in Western China to Yunan enabled him to speak from experience on the advantage of the re-opening of the old caravan route between Burmah and Hunan.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The Parliamentary Committee on Indian Finance resumed its sittings on Friday, the 23rd ult., Mr. Grant Duff occupying the chair, in the absence of Mr. Ayrton.

Mr. W. R. Cassels, of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, gave evidence on the Indian tariff, showing that it would be feasible, and would not be injurious to revenue, to abolish all duties, both export and import, in India if, in lieu thereof there was an additional 10 per cent. put on the land-tax, the productiveness of the land being such that it could very well bear additional taxation. Reviewing the existent duties weighing upon trade and commerce in Bombay, he instanced the export duty of 5 per cent. on manufactured goods, and 5 per cent. on yarns as objectionable. The duties on grain were felt to be oppressive in some parts of the Western Presidency. A petition to the Legislative Council of Bombay, emanating from the merchants of Bombay and the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, had complained of high duties, and this petition represented that in some instances the imposts were as high as 14 per cent. In the case of oils and other seeds, the duties were oppressive. Protective duties were no longer necessary in India now that there was no limitation to commercial operations. Where practicable, he advised that the same means should be adopted in India as in America for facilitating traffic—viz., by cheapening transport. In the present incomplete state of the railway system, the cotton had often to be carried for hundreds of miles on the backs of bullocks, and on lumbering native carts without springs. The expenses of this mode of carriage were very great. In Berar it was cent. per cent. cost on the value of the cotton carried. Means were at hand for cheapening carriage. There was the Berar Railway and the improvements going on in the navigation of the Godavery River, also the coal discoveries.

The witness next referred to the home manufactures of the Bombay Presidency, and said they had latterly so much increased as to render the people to some extent independent of exports of manufactured goods. There were now as many as twelve cotton-mills at work in different parts of the Presidency, employing a large amount of labour in working in all about 2,000 looms. The increased duties imposed by Mr. Wilson in 1862 of 10 per cent. on exports of piece goods, and 5 per cent. on yarns, had first occasioned the establishment of cotton-mills. The agricultural resources of Western India were rich in the extreme, only requiring improved modes of irrigation, agriculture, cheapness of transit, &c., to be rendered much more productive. The witness referred to the commerce of Bombay, and produced statistical returns to show that the trade of Bombay had become in late years larger even than that of the Bengal Presidency. The latest return showed that the amount of the trade of Bombay had been £24,000,000 sterling in 1869-70, against £21,000,000 sterling, which was the amount of the trade of Bengal in 1869-70.

Mr. William Maitland, formerly a partner in the Calcutta firm of Mackillup, Stuart and Co., was next called and examined on opium revenue. He stated that in the course of fourteen years' mercantile experience he had paid great attention to the opium traffic. He had advised the appointment of a commission by the Bengal Government to ascertain the real extent of the opium cultivation now going on in China, the commission to be composed of merchants acquainted with the Indian opium trade, who should proceed to China and there carry on their inquiries on the spot. The witness said he considered the opium revenue was now in a very precarious condition, especially as it had been ascertained by careful analysis that the Chinese drug was very little, if at all, inferior to that produced at Patna. He was opposed to Customs duties generally, but particularly so to the export duty on rice, which was rapidly destroying the rice-trade of Calcutta and British Burmah. He had no objection to an income-tax of two per cent., provided it was not levied on too low a rate of income. Neither did he object to a salt-tax, which he regarded very much in the light of a poll-tax. It was the only tax that touched the poorest classes, and all classes ought to contribute something to the public treasury. In the event of export duties being abolished, the deficit thus caused might be made good by a succession duty, but the witness admitted that he had not read Sir Henry Main's paper pointing out the extreme difficulty of imposing such a duty. Mr. Maitland was further of opinion that tea-culture was only in its infancy, and would in time assume gigantic proportions. At the present time the annual export was estimated at about 16,000,000 lbs., but eventually a sufficient quantity of tea might be obtained from India to supply all Europe. In the meantime, the planters formed a sort of garrison, but in reply to Sir Charles Wingfield the witness admitted that in ordinary times the tea plantations rather encouraged inroads from frontier tribes than furnished the means of resisting aggression; still, in a general rebellion the planters would render good service. Reverting to the subject of opium, Mr. Maitland thought it desirable to throw open the poppy cultivation to private enterprise, as Government was always an expensive producer and manufacturer. In any case the Government ought to reduce the rate now paid to ryots, who received more than their fair share of the profits of cultivation. The witness added that the income-tax falls chiefly on persons who do not pay land-tax.

The committee met again on Tuesday (A. S. Ayrton, Esq., in the chair), when Major Champain, Royal Engineers, who had superintended the construction of the Indo-European Telegraph through Persia, was examined. He explained in what manner the Government of India had associated itself with a public company, the Indo-European Telegraph Company, in constructing and maintaining a telegraph line through Persia. The line, having been made, had not proved profitable as a speculation. More than a million sterling had been paid by the Government for the line. Mr. W. T. Thornton, of the Public Works Department, India office, had penned a minute, in which he advocated the giving up, or selling, the line. But although it had paid nothing to revenue, and had, in fact, been worked at a dead loss during the last four years, it had commenced well, and in the first three years of its existence had paid a dividend of ¾ per cent, or rather more. It was anticipated that the line would pay ultimately. The expenses of the line were greater considerably in comparison with receipts in the last year than in the previous two years. The expenditure in 1869 was £63,000 against receipts £56,000. We had made no preparation to renew the contract with Persia, which would expire in 1872. The line was certainly important as binding our political relations with Persia. The line had been supplied with stores by open contract—the lowest tender was taken. The original charges for messages by the Indo-European line were as high as £4. 10s. and £5. 1s. [The uniform through charges of all the Indian lines have now been arranged as follows:—To Persia, £1. 16s.; to Kurrachee, £3. 3s. 9d. and £4. 0s. 6d.; to India (west or east of Chittagong), £3. 14s. and £4. 14s.] It would not be possible to reduce working expenses lower than £62,000 a-year. They expected to improve the receipts by falling in with the present enhanced uniform scales of charges. The military and business communications of the Abyssinian war had been carried on through this line.

Mr. W. T. Thornton, Secretary of the Public Works Department, India Office, had advised the Government's withdrawal from their Persian line, as there was now in existence a Turkish line which competed with it. But had we withdrawn, the Persian Government could not have maintained the line themselves. Why the Government did not withdraw from it was, first, there being no one else to carry it on; secondly, the importance of the line as cementing our political relations with the Shah. The British Government had communicated with the Turkish Government, and had carried on some correspondence relating to their line between Bagdad and Bussorah. It was concerning the extension to the Port of Kurrachee, which was required. The Turkish Telegraph runs from Constantinople to Bagdad and Bussorah. It was this line that had been found so untrustworthy, in consequence of its passing through country occupied by turbulent tribes. It was in consequence of the insecurity of the Turkish Telegraph that the Indo-European had been undertaken. A discussion ensued respecting a sum of 9s. 6d. that the Indo-European Telegraph Company charged upon messages from one place to another in India. The charge was the same under certain circumstances, whether the message was to the "next door" or from Calcutta to Bombay. The Government had been at so great a cost for the line that it kept up its charges. The 9s. 6d. was received by the company and accounted for to the Government. It lately been taken over by the Government, who were therefore now entirely responsible for the charge. Witness next gave some information respecting the telegraph contracts, stores, and the mode of constructing the line. The cables had originally been laid in a very rough and insecure fashion which had led to large expenses for repairs.

Major Champain on being recalled mentioned that a liberal offer had been made by a Persian nobleman or gentleman to import any amount of stores required by the Indo-European Telegraph at his own expense rather than the line should be given up.

The Committee resumed its sitting on Friday. Kazi Shahabudin, formerly Deputy Collector in Gazerat, gave evidence on the pressure of the land assessments in the Western Presidency upon the people. His panacea for the evils of over taxation was the redemption of the land tax, and he would apply the proceeds of the money paid to the reduction of the Indian debt. He stated that the interior of the country could and ought to be made more productive by the encouragement of agriculture and a free system of irrigation. He thoroughly approved of Sir D. Macleod's proposition of Consultative Councils, "whereby the wants and wishes of the people—wants better known than cared for—could be communicated to those capable and willing to attend to them." By such means the confidence of the people might be gained and the amelioration needed secured. The poor agriculturists of Western India were harassed with taxes, duties, and cesses they could not afford to pay. These ought to be removed at once if you desired to obtain their confidence. After liberating the natives from excessive taxation the next step would be to introduce State-protected education, which was the course to pursue to facilitate the social progress and material wealth of India.

Miscellaneous.

EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION.—On Monday, July 3, there will be a meeting of the East India Association at the rooms of the Society of Arts, John Street, Adelphi, to discuss Sir Bartle Frere's address on "The Means of Ascertaining Public Opinion in India."

BREECHLOADERS.—We understand Sir Joseph Whitworth, just as the Artillery authorities have abandoned breech-loading guns, because of defective mechanism in fuse and breech-loading, in want of power, &c., has made a breech-loader of immense power and great simplicity, which he expects to establish an incontestable supremacy over the new muzzle-loaders.—Army and Navy Gazette.

PRIZE ESSAY.—The gold medal of the Royal Artillery Institution has been awarded to Lieutenant H. W. L. Hime, R.A., for his prize essay on "The Duties and Position of Artillery." Lieutenant Hime passed into the corps from the Royal Military Academy in June, 1860, having received his earlier education at Trinity College, Dublin. He is the author of "The Mobility of Field Artillery, Past and Present," and of some other kindred works.

DEPOTS.—Officers commanding regiments having depots of corps in India attached thereto, and the officers Commanding Cavalry Depot, Canterbury, and the Depot Battalion at Chatham, have been requested to furnish to the Adjutant-General, not later than the 15th instant, a nominal return, on the form (appendix A), of all privates who will be under twenty years of age on 1st December next. This order does not apply to the following corps, to which drafts will not be sent:—20th Hussars, 2nd Battalion 10th Foot, 1st Battalion 19th Foot, 2nd Battalion 24th Foot, 38th Foot, 3rd Battalion 60th Foot, 79th Foot, 104th Foot, 105th Foot, 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade. —Broad Arrow.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—The report of the East Indian Railway Company for the half-year ending 31st December last has been issued. The gross receipts in that period were £1,193,413. 12s. 5d., against £1,125,719. 8s. 8d. in the corresponding half-year; and the net earnings were £666,136. 8s. 11d., against £613,841. 6s. 9d. The guaranteed interest for the half-year amounted to £672,199. 15s. 3d., and would have been more than provided for by the net earnings, which, but for the charge for Indian income-tax, would have been £688,596. 19s. 8d.; as it is, the net earnings only fall short of the interest by £6,063. 6s. 4d. The revenue account of the Jubbulpore line shows that the gross receipts for the half-year were £52,999. 19s., against £53,789. 16s. 4d. in the corresponding half-year; while the net earnings were £9,035. 13s. 7d., against £1,712. 10s. 3d.

SUEZ CANAL.—A correspondent in the Times writes to say that if there be twenty-six feet of water in the Suez Canal, as stated by Sir D. Lange, that at any rate a ship of his has grounded in coming through, her draught being 17½ feet forward, and 20½ feet aft. This sounds a rather strange statement, when we are continually hearing of the safe and rapid passages of so many larger vessels. But when we come to read the letter of the captain of this steamer, which is also printed, we confess we are hardly so much surprised at his painful experience. "Thirty-one times," says he, "we grounded in the Canal, out of which four times athwart." Now, we never understood that the Canal was of such dimensions as to admit of a vessel steaming through broadside on. Another part of the letter speaks of the pilot having stuck her on shore. There must have been excessive bungling somewhere. All canals have limits, and the Suez is not an exception.—Asiatic.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, June 26.—THE ARMY BILL.—Notice was given of the terms of Mr. Graves's resolution, to be moved on the third reading of the Army Bill. It was to the effect that since the Bill has been narrowed to a single object, the House is unwilling to commit itself prematurely to a large expenditure known and unknown, and awaits from the Government a mature and comprehensive scheme which will place our military system on a sound and economical basis.

HOUSE OF LORDS, TUESDAY, June 27.—THE PERMANENT SETTLEMENT OF BENGAL.—Lord LYVEDEN presented a petition from six hundred zemindars, talookdars, putneedars, and others interested in permanently settled estates in the Presidency of Fort William, East Indies, complaining of a despatch of the Secretary of State for India of the 17th May, 1870. The ground of complaint was that it is proposed to impose a cess for defraying the cost of public education upon lands included in the permanent settlement of the Marquis of Cornwallis in 1793, a course which the petitioners contend is inconsistent with the terms of that arrangement, by which the burdens upon the territory included in it were fixed and rendered incapable of increase. The despatch to which he referred was only carried by the noble duke (the Duke of Argyll) in the Council of India by a majority of one, while the minority protested against it as involving a breach of faith with the landowners of Bengal.—The Duke of ARGYLL said that the land revenue of India was fully occupied with providing for the judicial, civil, and military administration of the empire. There was, therefore, no other mode of providing for drainage, roads, and education, than by the imposition of a local cess. The argument that the Government were precluded by the settlement of Lord Cornwallis from imposing such a cess upon the landowners of Bengal had been already considered and overruled when these persons raised a similar objection to the imposition of the income-tax upon them. It was again carefully considered in connection with the present subject; but although he admitted that the minority of the Council agreed with the petitioners, the majority concurred in the deputation which had been sent out, and which had been received with great satisfaction by the Indian community generally. He thought there could be no doubt, on the question of principle, that the permanent settlement of the land tax did not preclude the imposition of local cesses for carrying out objects of the greatest importance to the people; but at the same time he admitted that it was desirable to introduce these new burdens with great caution, and not to a greater extent than was absolutely essential.—The Marquis of SALISBURY agreed with the noble duke that there was no breach of faith in the imposition of these new taxes. At the same time it would be most unjust to impose undue and excessive burdens upon land for purposes unconnected with property.—After a few words from Lord HARRIS, the subject dropped.

THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—The Duke of RICHMOND asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he could give any information as to when the Army Regulation Bill was likely to come up to the House of Lords? The Bill was introduced into the other House on the 16th February, read a second time on the 17th March, and passed through committee on the 19th June. He did not complain of the length of time its discussion had occupied, but what was inconvenient was, that after the Bill had passed through committee, and before the third reading, the Government interposed another Bill of great importance. This necessarily delayed the progress of the Army Bill, which would not come under the consideration of their lordships until later than need have been the case, in consequence of the debate upon the Ballot Bill. At the present late period of the session this might deprive their lordships of the opportunity of considering these important measures with the attention they would desire to bestow upon them. —Earl GRANVILLE: I think it would be better to abstain from entering into the question as to the manner in which the Army Regulation Bill has been discussed in the other House of Parliament. It would yesterday have been very difficult for me to give an answer with any certainty to the question which the noble duke has put. But it appears that last night an arrangement was entered into, and I hope will be maintained, by which the third reading of the Bill will take place on Monday next, and, of course, it will immediately come up to this House. The noble duke has as good and, perhaps, better means than I have of knowing whether that arrangement will be maintained or not.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY, June 29.—JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF PRIVY COUNCIL BILL.—In moving the second reading of this Bill, the LORD CHANCELLOR said that care had been taken to frame it in such a way that on the reassembling of the Courts at the commencement of the legal year an efficient court might be formed in the Privy Council for the purpose of clearing off the arrears of Indian appeals. In order to attain this object it was proposed to empower the Queen to appoint four additional members of the Privy Council. Two of these would be taken either from acting or retired judges of the superior Courts at Westminster. If acting judges were appointed they would receive their present salary, while retired judges would receive £1,500 a-year in addition to their pensions, or, in the whole, the same salary as a judge of the Courts at Westminster. Then two other members would be appointed from those who had held the office of Chief Justice of Bengal, and these would in like manner receive an addition of £1,500 a-year to the pensions they at present enjoy. The additional payments to be made to the retired judges would only be payable so long as they attended the sittings of the Judicial Committee whenever summoned. The attendance of the new judges would not interfere with that of the present members of the Council; and, by this means, it was hoped that a quorum of three judges would be secured to sit continuously until the accumulation of Indian appeals was cleared off.—Lord CHELMSFORD said that he did not regard the measure as one of a satisfactory character. He did not think any of the acting judges in Westminster Hall would accept the position of a member of the Judicial Committee at their present salary, because, if they quitted their present Courts, their clerks, one of whom receives £600 and the other £400 a-year, would be turned adrift. In his opinion it was not desirable to rely on the services of retired judges; and he thought that the proper course would be to appoint a sufficient number of judges at a salary commensurate with the dignity and importance of a superior appellate court—say £6,000 a-year.—Lord WESTBURY welcomed with great satisfaction a measure which contained provisions sufficient for the immediate purpose. It was true that he would have preferred the appointment of permanent judges at higher salaries than those fixed by the Bill, but he knew this was impossible, and he was therefore content to take the goods the Government provide. At the same time he only did so because we could not afford to reject any measure which promised to meet an urgent and pressing want; but he could not accept it as a substitute for that larger measure for the reorganisation of the judicature which had been promised by the Lord Chancellor. He did not believe that there would be any difficulty in obtaining the services of the two acting judges of Westminster Hall, because, even if they lost the little patronage they enjoyed in the appointment of their clerks, that would be more than compensated by the saving both of time and expense consequent on their no longer being called upon to go circuit. — Lord ROMILLY expressed a general approval of the Bill.—The LORD CHANCELLOR, in reply, said that this Bill was not intended to provide a great and permanent scheme for carrying on the business of the Privy Council. He trusted that something far better might be devised for that purpose, but in the meantime it was necessary to meet an immediate want.—The Marquis of SALISBURY wished to know whether the system of a rota would be applied to ecclesiastical as well as to other appeals. He should be glad to be informed what was the course following in summoning members of the Judicial Committee to sit on ecclesiastical appeals.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said that all the members of the Judicial Committee who were at all likely to attend were written to. On the occasion of the last appeal he had also caused four or five gentlemen whom he did not expect to attend to be summoned, and one of them would have been present had he not been prevented by sudden illness. There was, he could assure the noble marquis, nothing like packing in the selection of a court for this purpose. As to the important ecclesiastical appeal now pending, he might take that opportunity of saying that he should take care that every member of the Judicial Committee was summoned when it came on for hearing.—The Bill was then read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, June 30.—COLONEL PROBYN.—Sir J. PAKINGTON asked the Secretary of State for War whether the Secretary of State for India had recommended that Colonel Dighton Probyn should be promoted to fill the vacancy in the list of generals of the Indian army caused by the death, on the 24th of last July, of General Podmore; and whether he intended to act upon that recommendation; and, if not, upon what grounds Colonel Probyn was not allowed to receive the promotion to which, under the regulations in force in such cases at the time of General Podmore's death, he had a just claim.—Mr. CARDWELL said that after the committee on the supercession of colonels reported last year, it became necessary to suspend the promotion of interim colonels until some action was taken on the report. The promotion of Colonel Probyn was included with the other suspended promotions, as it was thought that General Podmore died after the report was presented; but as that was now found not to be the case, Colonel Probyn's appointment would be made.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, June 30.—THE ARMY BILL.—When the report of the Army Regulation Bill came before the House of Commons at its early sitting, Lord ELCHO moved a resolution, declaring the inexpediency of proceeding with the measure until the whole scheme of the Government for the re-organisation of our military forces had been produced. After considerable discussion it was negatived without "taking the sense of the House." Eventually the Bill was ordered for a third reading on Monday.

THE ABYSSINIAN REGALIA.—When the House re-assembled at nine o'clock Colonel NORTH moved an address to the Crown in favour of the purchase for the nation of the Abuna's crown and chalice captured at Magdala by the British troops.—After speeches from the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, Sir S. NORTHCOTE, Colonel BARTELOT, Mr. EASTWICK, Mr. WALPOLE, and Mr. CANDLISH, Mr. GLADSTONE offered if the member of Oxfordshire would withdraw his motion to reconsider the question of the purchase with reference to the restoration of the articles to Abyssinia, and, upon the assurance of the Prime Minister, Colonel NORTH withdrew his resolution.

THE SLAVE TRADE ON THE EAST COAST OF AFRICA.—Mr. GILPIN rose to call attention to the slave trade papers recently laid upon the table of the House; and to move, "that an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that she will be graciously pleased to issue instructions for the negotiation of such a treaty with the Sultan of Zanzibar, as will relieve her Majesty's Government from existing arrangements, by which they are made parties to the slave trade; and that she will use all lawful means to procure the entire suppression of the slave traffic, and all export of slaves from the east coast of Africa." The hon. member said he need not trouble the House long, as he had been informed that the Government were re / to grant a Committee. The extent of the evil might be inf ed from the fact that between 1852 and 1867 the number of slaves exported from the different ports of the dominion of the Sultan of Zanzibar was 97,000, and, as it was estimated by Livingstone and others, that for every slave captured and brought to the coast five additional lives were sacrificed, there are thus during that period 582,000 human lives sacrificed. The hon. member read several extracts from the letters of Dr. Livingstone to show the extent to which this horrible traffic was still carried on by the slave agents of the Portuguese Government in Zanzibar; he described the miserable condition of the slaves and the ravages made in the country, and urged upon the Government the duty of putting an end to the treaty with the Sultan of Zanzibar which sanctioned the export of slaves eight months out of the twelve. As the Government were willing to consent to his motion, he would not take up the time of the House by any detailed statement; but in the interests of humanity, truth, and justice, he called upon them to assist in putting down this disgraceful traffic. (Hear, hear.)—Mr. KINNAIRD seconded the motion. —Mr. WHALLEY protested against their entering, at the benevolent instigation of the hon. member for Northampton and those who share his views upon another crusade against what he must call the laws of nature. He was extremely anxious to see the slave trade put an end to, but deprecated eternal intermeddling with the affairs of other countries.—Mr. FOWLER supported the motion.—Lord ENFIELD promised the best exertions of the Government to carry out the views of the member for Northampton, and was willing to consent to the appointment of a Committee.—Mr. R. GURNEY was willing to accept a Committee, but thought it should be appointed at once.—Mr. GILPIN accepted the proposal of the Government. Motion withdrawn.

INDIAN HARBOURS.

The Broad Arrow finds there is a coast-line of about 4,000 miles, abounding with harbours of the greatest value to the country—harbours which might readily be made secure ports for our valuable shipping. And yet what do we find? Simply that the Marine Department, whose special duty it was to look after these ports, was abolished about ten years since, the surveyors were discharged, and the topographical service of the coast of India has been almost entirely suspended. At Bombay much has been accomplished by private enterprise; still, when it is remembered that the next ten years will probably find Bombay the third mercantile city in the world, it is hardly politic for Government not to do more than it has done in rendering that first port of India not only a first-class mercantile port, but also, defensively, an equally valuable centre of Indian commerce. This is only one of many instances in which we find that the real interests of our great Indian Empire are lightly considered. Another and most important subject of serious consideration is the system of lighting along the coasts. At fourteen points new first-class lights are urgently required. On the Malabar coast especially is this want felt; in fact, on that coast ships could not approach with any degree of safety, being frequently detained days together, with consequent great damage to trade. On the Coromandel coast there was the harbour of Negapatam, the outlet of the whole of the magnificent delta of Tanjore, one of the most fertile regions on the face of the globe. With but small outlay this harbour might be made a first-class port. Port Blackwood, lying to the north of Madras, is another fine natural harbour, requiring but a breakwater to make it one of the most excellent ports a seaman could desire. The harbour of Capanaga is another instance of what a little outlay might accomplish. In the Travancore country was the excellent harbour of Cochin, being the best harbour in the south of India, which however, will be utterly destroyed unless timely steps are taken to prevent such a disaster. This and many other instances might be mentioned, but our space will not allow. We will only mention one more example of what Government might accomplish. For instance, take the voyage from Ceylon to Bombay: large ships have to take an additional voyage of upwards of 300 miles, simply owing to the existence of a small belt of land, which could be easily and inexpensively excavated. The fact of taking this additional circuit was nothing less than as if a ship, bound from Glasgow to Liverpool, had first to circumnavigate Ireland. Having thus briefly shown the deficiency in harbour accommodation, we would now state, in as few words as possible, what has been done or is doing to defend those harbours. As regards land fortifications, we will say little, for the simple reason that there does not exist a fort in India but what could be destroyed in a few hours by any modern iron-clad. And thus we have really to consider that our Indian ports are simply under the protection, or will be, of the two vessels of the low freeboard Monitor type, several of which have been built, or are now building, for the protection of our colonial harbours. The Magdala and Abyssinia were the two built expressly for the defence of Bombay. These two vessels are, no doubt, most formidable ships of war, but only for defence. As we have stated, they are built on the low freeboard Monitor plan, being of about 2,000 tons burthen, and 200 horse-power; length 225 feet, breadth 42 feet. They each carry four 18-ton guns, placed two in each turret. The armour-plating is seven inches thick in some parts, and six inches in other parts of the hull; the armour in the turrets is 9 and 10in. thick. On the decks of these ships is what is called a breastwork of solid armour-plating of about 9in. thick; this breastwork is 3ft. 2in. high, and extends 107ft. in length and 36ft. 4in. in breadth. Thus our readers can well imagine the enormous strength of these ships. Still, there is this one weak point, viz., such enormous power concentrated in two vessels. There is little doubt but that in the next naval war the torpedo will be brought into use most extensively and effectually. This being a probable danger, such vessels as the Abyssinia and Magdala may, some dark night, be sent to the bottom through the explosion of one of these submarine engines. Better far, in our estimation, would be the equipment of several small powerful vessels of the Staunch class, carrying one powerful gun, and which, if destroyed, would not entail so serious a loss on the country. For we find that thirty or forty of the Staunch type might be built at the cost of one Magdala, and we feel perfectly convinced that, it would require but three or four of such small, yet powerful vessels, to place Bombay or any other of our Indian harbours in comparative security: and with this advantage, too, their greater capability of locomotion, a serious drawback on the part of their unwieldy though formidable rivals.

University of Madras.—The office of Vice-Chancellor of the University of Madras having become vacant by effluxion of time, his Excellency the Governor in Council of Fort St. George has been pleased to re-appoint to that office the Hon. Sir C. H. Scotland, Kt., Chief Justice of the High Court of Judicature.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

RUPTURES.—BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS, Perfected and Exhibited in the Great Exhibition of 1851, is allowed by upwards of 200 Medical Gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of Hernia. The use of a steel spring, so often hurtful in its effects, is here avoided; a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit) forwarded by post on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the Manufacturer, Mr. WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London.

Price of a Single Truss, 16s., 21s., 26s. 6d., and 31s. 6d., postage, 1s. Price of Double Truss, 31s. 6d., 42s., and 52s. 6d.; postage, 1s. 8d. Umbilical, 42s. and 52s. 6d.; postage, 1s. 10d.

Post-office Orders payable to JOHN WHITE, Post-office, Piccadilly.

NEW PATENT.

ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, &c.—The material of which these are made is recommended by the Faculty as being peculiarly elastic and compressible, and the best invention for giving efficient and permanent support in all cases of weakness and swelling of the Legs, Varicose Veins, Sprains, &c. It is porous, light in texture, and inexpensive, and is drawn on like an ordinary stocking. Price 4s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 10s. to 16s. each; postage, 6d.

JOHN WHITE, MANUFACTURER, 228, PICCADILLY, LONDON.

PROFESSIONAL OPINIONS

SUPPORTING AND RECOMMENDING THIS SYSTEM.

March, 1871.

I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of commending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.

C. M. MILLER, M.D.,
Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. BROWNE.—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be overrated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out at all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys.

H. EYRE, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.

For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of obedience and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the Government shall wisely insist upon every child being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.

Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere martinet. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly; have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.

It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and, therefore, succeeds admirably.

JAMES RUNTZ, Head Master.

Kingsland Middle Class Schools, Sandringham-road, March 7, 1871.

Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites of youth, and if such exercise be conducted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor; but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained, the result will be all that can be desired.

ROBERT LANE, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon this physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To insure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good disciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of these qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.

THOMAS WILSON, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies, Benyon-house, 32, Culford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their schoolfellows, a point too frequently overlooked, when a large number are being drilled.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, June 13; Agra and Madras, June 11; Calcutta, June 10.

According to the Bombay papers the monsoon appears to have set in very mildly this year. A good deal of rain has fallen, which would bring down the temperature many degrees, but the violent gales so common at such a time have hitherto forborne from blowing. Owing to the cooler weather Sir S. Fitzgerald and Sir A. Spencer, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Bombay, have returned from Mahableshwar to Poonah.

No. 1 Company and the Quarter-guard of the 19th Madras N.I. were paraded at Madras on the 6th June in order to undergo the doom decreed for their mutinous behaviour in February last. In presence of one British and three Native regiments the sepoys of the 19th listened to the reading of the order for the disbandment of their mutinous comrades; after which the latter were marched back under escort to the place where they were to be paid off and turned adrift.

WE are happy to hear that the cholera in the 18th Hussars at Secunderabad is gradually dying out. Out of eighty men taken ill, thirty-six had died by the first week in June. On the 4th of that month however there were only two admissions and one death. Sunstroke appears to have succeeded cholera, two sergeants having already died of the former complaint. According to a writer in the Athenæum, the Medical Staff at Secundrabad is more remarkable for numbers than experience. All its members are "very young," and their inexperience has not yet been remedied by the employment of older men. We are not surprised therefore to hear that "this has caused great doubt as to the efficiency of the B.M.S. in Secundrabad."

THE "palatial" barracks at Allahabad appear to maintain the high character which those masterpieces of Anglo-Indian architecture deserved to win. During the first week in June the officers' barracks showed only 100 degrees of heat by the thermometer, even in the cool of the evening. In the men's barracks, where the heat was much greater than in the old lines during the day, the temperature at night was somewhat cooler. These beautiful buildings let in both heat and rain with perfect impartiality. So steadily leak their roofs that last year the officers had to pitch tents to keep out the wet. "Nothing," we are told, "seems to have been done to prevent similar discomfort this year."

THE Committee appointed by Mr. G. Campbell to consider the best means of raising revenue from local sources for local purposes have sent in their report. As a tax on land was the inevitable condition of their inquiries, they have decided that the land-tax should be based on rental, that the ryots should pay in proportion to the rent of their holdings, and that rent-receivers should contribute according to the profits they derive from the land. It is also proposed that the whole of the collections should be made through the zemindars.

FROM the 1st October the Indian Post-office will lower its rates on "newspapers and printed matter" to half an anna for 10 tolas (about 2 ounces) and one anna for 20 tolas, with half an anna added for every 10 tolas. "When," asks the Bombay Gazette, "shall we hear of a reduction in overland postage?" We should be glad to answer that question if we could; but some perverse influence seems bent on dooming us for ever to the payment of a shilling on letters and fourpence on newspapers.

A CALCUTTA telegram of July 8 reports the Ameer's army as being so "furious" at the murder of their general, Feramorz Khan, that they could hardly be restrained from killing Aslum Khan, the supposed cause of his death. Yakoob Khan professes to put all faith in his father's promises, and is said to be quite ready to return to Kabul. It is thought that he and Shere Ali will soon be thoroughly reconciled.

ACCORDING to a Calcutta telegram of July 5 the Indian War Department is believed to have prepared a very satisfactory answer to General Balfour's financial strictures. It is said that 2½ millions of new charges have been added to the military accounts since 1863, and that was the year when an enormous increase took place in the cost of the British soldier in India. We are also told that Sir G. Balfour's estimate of the reductions made in the strength of the Indian army is greatly beyond the mark. Assertions of this kind are always easier to make than to uphold. It is a standing complaint against Sir George that his financial reforms cut down the necessary outlay to a mischievous extent; but the same cry has been raised against all financial reformers in every age. It is possible of course that General Balfour has overlooked or underrated some new sources of outlay, which might seriously detract from the soundness of his conclusions; but after all he is a trained financier, too deeply versed in the details of Indian administration to be guilty of such mistakes and oversights as a novice might be prone to commit.

FROM a Patna telegram of last week we learn that Hashmadad Khan, one of the chief Wahabi prisoners, has been set free owing to the insufficient evidence brought against him. Ameer Khan however and the other prisoners are reported as still undergoing their trial. Looking at the easy credulity of Anglo-Indian officials and the readiness of Indian witnesses to swear to anything, we should not be very much surprised to hear of a general collapse in the case for the prosecution. Fools may abound in India as well as in other countries, but the folly of carrying on plots against the British rule must by this time have fully revealed itself to the most disaffected of our Indian subjects.

THE same telegram which announces the coming Camp of Exercise, informs us that the King of Burmah has proclaimed free-trade within his dominions, and that the Indian Government is considering the question of a campaign against the Loshais. That is a question which it is surely too late to be considering now.

COLONEL KEATINGE has already taken a long step towards those Consultative Councils which must some day get themselves established all over India. He has invited certain of his subordinates in the Central Provinces to hold conference with himself from time to time on the local questions of the day. The first meeting will be held on the 5th September, when questions regarding roads and irrigation will be debated by the Chief Commissioner with his Judicial Commissioner, the several Commissioners of Divisions, the Chief Engineer, and a number of Deputy Commissioners and public works officers. Colonel Keatinge would also appoint a committee to revise rules for the examination of public servants, pleaders, and candidates for the public service. Among other topics suggested for ulterior discussion is the expediency of a change in the court languages of the Central Provinces, with an eye to future rather than present needs.

UNPLEASANT stories regarding the treatment of Indian coolies are continually cropping up. At one time it is the West Indian planters, at another those of the Mauritius, who play the leading parts therein. Presently comes a scandalous revelation from Calcutta or Allahabad, touching the arts of interested man-catchers who include women also in their line of business. And now we hear dark accounts of the way in which coolies from Madras have been ill-treated during their terms of service in Natal. According to those who have lately returned from that colony the planters are much given to flogging their coolie servants with pieces of hard bull's-hide called "cheenbucks," and rubbing the wounds so inflicted with salt and water. Occasionally an iron rod does duty for the cheenbuck. A milder form of punishment consists in dragging a man to the police-station with a rope tied round his neck. If a cooly stops away from work he is fined—not very unfairly—half-a-crown; but a cooly who may be ill and takes physic is fined a shilling a day. Wages appear to be very irregularly paid; and if a man who has been badly beaten hides himself for two or three days in the bush, he has to work for nothing on his return. One planter appears to have dealt so cruelly with his servants, that four of them escaped his tyranny by hanging themselves. The coolies are led to expect a gratuity of £10 at the end of their service, but none of them has ever received a penny of the promised sum. How far these and similar complaints are true and reasonable, we cannot say; but the Indian Government has resolved, it seems, to forward copies of them to Natal, in order that the Government there may make inquiries into what, if true, represents a state of things demanding prompt amendment. With all allowance for possible misstatements and probable provocations on the cooly's side, there is but too much reason to fear that slavery in its worst forms lives again in many places under the guise of imported service for a given term of years.

ONE good result of such nightmare lucubrations as the "Battle of Dorking," if any good is possible from such crude and groundless appeals to national cowardice, may be to develop a sound working system of military teaching and organisation. Even the last review at Bushey Park shows how much our troops and officers have yet to learn of elemental tactics and strategy; a want which the series of manœuvres promised for this autumn will tend, we hope, to do away. In India also a similar movement in the same direction has lately been started under the auspices of Lord Napier. Not long since we noted the first meeting of a Society answering to the United Service Institution at Whitehall. Camps of exercise are not unknown to the Indian Army; but the sort of thing which Sir Sydney Cotton long since demanded in vain is now promised by Lord Napier on a scale sufficient for the need. At the beginning of the next cold season Ghazeeabad, the nearest military cantonment to Delhi, at the junction of two great lines of railway, will become the centre of a great gathering of horse, foot, and guns, for the purpose of practising all the movements required of an army in the field. Six regiments of native and nine of British cavalry will be formed into three brigades. Six brigades of foot will be composed out of six battalions of British and twelve of native infantry. To these will be attached three batteries of horse artillery, with eighteen guns, five field batteries of thirty guns, and one mountain battery, besides six companies of sappers and miners. This army of more than twenty thousand men—a force quite large enough for Indian warfare—will be in three divisions, commanded severally by Major-Generals M'Murdo, Travers, and Fraser-Tytler, under the chief command of Lord Napier himself, who will keep the troops out in camp for about four months, training them among other things in the long neglected mysteries of outpost duty, and in a higher style of mimic warfare than that which has hitherto been tolerated at Woolwich, Brighton, and Aldershot.

IF any one doubts the capacity of Hindustanies to march with the times, he will find his doubts removed by a glance at some of the papers which have arrived from India by the last mail but one. There is a bold Talookdar of Rohilkund, Baboo Girdhari Lal by name, who proposes to do for his countrymen what Mr. Cook has for some time past been doing so successfully for honest English folk. In short, he has undertaken, if customers sufficient can be found, to charter a steamer for the use of Hindoos desirous of making a pleasure-trip to England. Everything will be done to ensure their comfort and to protect their caste. Cooking-places will be provided for their use alone, as well as places for prayer and washing. No such things as beef, hides, fat, or horn, is to be allowed on board the vessel, and as many of the crew as possible are to consist of Hindoos. The only doubt is whether a sufficient number of the Baboo's countrymen will answer to his call.

THE Nawab of Bengal has fared no better at the hands of a British Parliament than did the Landholders of Bengal. Mr. Haviland Burke's prayer for a Committee of Inquiry into his client's grievances was rejected by nearly two to one in the House of Commons on Tuesday last, after a debate in which several speakers of note took part. All that could have been pleaded in the Nawab's favour was well and temperately urged by Mr. Haviland Burke; but when speaker after speaker of Indian experience showed cause for the rejection of his prayer, we need not wonder at the barren result of all that eloquence. Sir Charles Wingfield and Sir Stafford Northcote joined in deprecating any reference to a select committee; the latter especially insisting that "the East India Company had treated the family with fairness and liberality," and upholding the competency of the Indian Government to settle the Nawab's claims without a Committee. Sir C. Wingfield pointed out the great mistake of "supposing that the people of India had any affection for this family or for any other of the Mohammedan princes," and Mr. Eastwick held that the Indian Government stood pledged to nothing but the continued payment of £160,000 a-year to the Nawab and his heirs.

THE burden of the defence however rested with Mr. Grant Duff, and most successfully did he bear it throughout. The high claims advanced by Mr. H. Burke on his client's behalf were met by the assertion that the present Nawab was merely an "eighth successor" to an officer in the service of Surajah Dowlah, himself an officer under the Great Mogul. Meer Jaffier, Clive's tool and puppet, was no hereditary prince, and his descendants are merely "titled stipendiaries" of the British Government. The agreements made with successive Nawabs were "solely of a personal character," binding the Government to nothing permanent or unalterable. Beyond a moral right to hold "a conspicuous position in Bengal," Mr. Grant Duff, backed by the opinions of Sir R. Palmer and Mr. Leigh, declined to go in recognising the claims put forward by the present Nawab. He showed that each of the treaties of 1765 and 1770 was made for the lifetime only of the contracting parties, that Mobarak-ud-dowlah was quite content with his reduced stipend, and that nothing had been done unfairly with the Nizámat Deposit Fund. The Nawab himself had endorsed the compromise of his suit with Mackenzie, Lyall, and Co., on account of heavy losses incurred during his minority by Mr. H. Torrens, whose character Mr. Grant Duff cleared from all blame save that of indiscretion. We may note indeed with Sir C. Wingfield, that no complaint was ever made against Mr.

Torrens until long after his death. On the whole it may be admitted that Mr. G. Duff made a masterly defence against charges which look worse on paper than in fact. It is clear, we think, that the Indian Government is not bound to pay more than £160,000 a-year for political powers which never could have become the hereditary appanage of an Indian chief or noble. We would even go further and counsel them to drop the farcical title of Nawab Nazim — "Prince Administrator." Let his Highness retain his present stipend under certain conditions, and the simple title of Nawab without the "Nazim," which expresses only what he is not and can never be. At the same time we are not sure that the question raised by Mr. H. Burke would not have been settled to the greater contentment of most people by means of reference to a Select Committee. Such a concession could not have endamaged the Government in the slightest degree, while the award of an impartial committee under Sir S. Northcote would have silenced those who may still find some excuse for saying hard things against the trustees of a wealthy but discontented Indian suitor. India could easily pay a quarter of a million if the claim were just. Substantial justice the Nawab may have received already, but will his countrymen refrain from questioning the verdict of a Court which stands on its own defence? A Select Committee would at least have saved the Government from all appearance of deciding in its own interests.

"BETTER late than never" is all that we can say of an Indian appeal case just decided by the Privy Council. The appellant, an aged widow lady of Oudh, had some of her property confiscated years ago by the Financial Commissioner of the day. Ever since then she has been trying to recover her lost possessions. Two members of the Oudh Commission some time ago decided in her favour, but their judgment was set aside by the Financial Commissioner, and from that decision the old lady appealed to this country. In trying the case, Lord Justice Mellish made a severe remark on the great neglect shown by "some of the Government people," and the delay which had taken place in hearing the petition. In passing judgment in her favour, Lord Justice James laid similar stress on "the treatment the poor widow had received." The decree is to carry costs, and the judges concur in hoping that the Indian Government will "act in a liberal manner to the poor lady, and award her a fair compensation" for the long delay in recovering her rights. For its own sake, as well as hers, we hope it will. Let us also hope that the remodelled Judicial Committee of the future will secure to Indian suitors of both sexes speedier and cheaper justice than they have lately been wont to enjoy.

THE new Indian Court or "Annex" in the International Exhibition was opened on Thursday last, and its contents did credit to the energy of Dr. Forbes Watson. The Court was crowded for the "private view," a circumstance which added greatly to the heat of a poorly ventilated building. There was an inviting collection of Indian toys, a goodly show of embroideries and choice work in gold and silver—especially the "kooftgari" and "bidri" patterns, the tastefulness of which is simply matchless. Of the carpets from Lahore and Mirzapore we cannot say so much as we should have said if they had been up to their usual mark. The carved blackwood furniture also shows a marked falling off from the exquisite shapes and patterns of 1862. After all there are prettier things to see in the Indian Museum, if it did not lie up so many flights of stairs.

THE Homeward Indian Mail, which left Alexandria on Saturday last, may be expected in London on Saturday morning next.

HOUSEHOLD EXPENSES IN INDIA.

THE Pioneer complains that "the expenses of living in India seem to be steadily on the increase," and denies that they are "balanced by reduction in the prices of beer, wine, and other Europe stores, caused by the general introduction of railways, and the rapid and cheaper carriage via the Suez Canal from England." That this is so is a sad truth, but that consumers have not the remedy in their own hands we are not prepared to admit. While people will pay one rupee eight annas a pound for ham and bacon, and equally high prices for other Europe stores, they must expect to bear a heavy drain on their income. But the remedy is so simple that we have often wondered it has not been adopted wherever half-a-dozen Europeans are in the same station. We know of a party of five gentlemen, in a station in the Punjab, who clubbed together, got their provisions out direct from Messrs. Crosse and Blackwell, and Moir and Son, and eat their ham, bacon, and cheese at a cost of twelve annas a pound. In more than one instance, after helping themselves to all they needed, they disposed of their invoices of goods to the native retail dealers at a profit of 25 and 30 per cent. The same party fed their own sheep, and had better mutton than the bazaar could supply at a cost of one rupee four annas a quarter. It is only improvidence that leads to unnecessary expense. Even without clubs, mofusssil residents may procure Europe provisions at 50 per cent. less than the retail charges they pay, by getting them from Messrs. Anderson and Co., of Calcutta, who supply the best ham and bacon from Crosse and Blackwell at fourteen annas a pound. If people will wilfully disregard these advantages, they have only themselves to blame, and not the difficulties they bring upon themselves.

Then as to servants; a man with an income of four or five hundred rupees a month has no business to pay one hundred a month towards wages; and only they who indulge in ostentatious display do so. Servants of the Government in India are better paid than the servants of any other Government in the world, and have it in their power to live well and save from their incomes. But if people with five hundred a month are foolish enough to vie in appearance with those who have two thousand, all the senseless grumbling in the world will not help them out of their troubles.

It has become the fashion in India for ladies to pass the hot months at some hill station, leaving their husbands in the plains, utterly indifferent to the future troubles they are creating for themselves and their children. And the latter are, we are sorry to observe, senseless enough to acquiesce in the arrangement. How is it possible that a man, with even a thousand a-month, can make provision for his family, who for seven, or even six, months in the year maintains two establishments and has to meet all the unnecessary charges of travelling and increased cost of living on the hills? With these stern facts meeting them year after year, they go on to the end of the chapter, and leave their families paupers, or, at the best, scantily provided for at the Uncovenanted fund. Then, while in the plains, every wife of a deputy magistrate and other officers of the same grade will have her carriage and pair of horses, and make an appearance in other respects equal to that of the wife of the collector or judge. Such people deserve no sympathy. They are paid sufficiently well to enable them to live respectably and comfortably, and even to save money. If husbands and wives will be wickedly regardless of their future and of the future of their children, we pity the latter, but for the former we have nothing short of condemnation. To say that a man, with a family, on the receipt of Rs. 800 a-month, and residing in Tirhoot, Alighur, or Loodianah, cannot lay by Rs. 200 a-month is to tell us what our experience has taught us is beside the truth. There are, of course, exceptional cases, where men have to struggle against difficulties which they cannot avoid; but, in the majority of cases, foolish extravagance, induced by aping their betters, is the cause of all the troubles which people have to encounter in after life. We repeat that an assistant commissioner or deputy magistrate, in the receipt of Rs. 500 a-month, can live respectably and save money out of his income.

MOHAMMEDAN LAW OF SUCCESSION.

AN "Ex-Indian Professor," in a pamphlet published by Davy and Sons, calls timely attention to an apparent failure of justice sanctioned by the Madras Government in a case of disputed succession to the independent Jagheer of Bunganapilly. The deceased Chief of that small feudal State left behind him a daughter's son, whose right to succeed him under the Mohammedan rules of inheritance was yet further strengthened by the terms of Lord Canning's "Sunnud," issued in 1863—according to the "Professor," that is a year after Lord Canning's death—for the special guidance and satisfaction of his Mohammedan subjects. This was one of two Sunnuds issued at the same time for a similar purpose, the other being intended for the Hindoos. In order to confirm the pledges of the Royal Proclamation with regard to the rights and privileges of native chiefs and princes, Lord Canning in his Mohammedan Sunnud desired to convey to those he addressed "the assurance that, on failure of natural heirs, the British Government will permit and confirm any succession to" a Mohammedan State, "which may be legitimate according to Mohammedan Law. Be assured"—he went on to say—"that nothing shall disturb the engagements thus made to you, so long as your house is loyal to the Crown and faithful to the conditions of the treaties, grants, and engagements, which record its obligations to the British Government." Lord Canning's object was clearly defined at the time by the present Secretary for India in an article contributed to the Edinburgh Review. He sought to "adopt and announce a rule in regard to succession to native States, more distinct than could be found either in our own previous practice, or in that of former paramount Powers of India."

It is true, as Mr. Emerson Dawson, the ex-Indian in question, admits, that Mohammedan usage with regard to succession has never been so uniform as that of the Hindoos. In Turkey, as everyone knows, the right to a throne has often been determined by the strong hand, and even the preference so often accorded to a surviving brother over an infant son is held by good authorities to rest on no valid foundations. In India at any rate custom has always favoured direct succession, whether in the male or female line, except in cases of unusual urgency. Bhopal is but one of many instances in which queens, ruling in their own right, have asserted by the fruits of superior ability their right to rule. Some indeed of the wisest and ablest of Indian sovereigns have been women. Such a fact of course would not of itself prove the right of a woman to succeed her father in default of direct heirs male; but that such a right of succession is the rule in India among Mohammedan as well as Hindoo States, is a point on which there never seemed to be a doubt before the late decision of the Madras Government. The very last chief of Bunganapilly was himself the son of his predecessor's daughter, and was a minor when, with his own father for Regent, he took his grandfather's place. This principle of direct inheritance from father or mother to son or daughter and grandchildren is affirmed without qualification in Baillie's "Digest of Moohummudan Law." If a father leaves no sons behind him, the daughter or daughters inherit the whole of his estate. In no case would his brother cut out his grandchild, much less his own daughter. On the same principle Shah Jehan, the reigning Queen of Bhopal, succeeded to her mother's throne in preference to her first cousin. If she had had a son, Mr. Dawson thinks it not unlikely that her place would have been filled by him, herself acting meanwhile as vicegerent; but "in no case would they have preferred her male first cousin to herself, much less to her son, to occupy the Musnud."

In the Bunganapilly Succession case however this plain rule appears to have been set aside for no sufficient reason. Instead of acknowledging the deceased chief's daughter or his daughter's son, the Madras authorities have decided in favour of his nephew, who is neither the "natural heir," nor "the legitimate heir according to Mohammedan law." They have chosen one who labours under a twofold exclusion in preference to one who enjoys a twofold claim to succeed the last lord. We agree with Mr. Dawson that such a decision tends to remove that feeling of certainty which Lord Canning's Circular was specially meant to inspire in the minds of his subjects. If the facts have been correctly stated, and we have no reason for thinking otherwise, the Government of Madras would appear to have acted with much less wisdom than the present Sultan of Turkey, when he lately assented to the change proposed by the Viceroy of Egypt in the rule of succession to his kingdom; a change which brings Egyptian practice into harmony at once with Mohammedan law and with the usage of nearly all civilised nations. How the Madras authorities can reconcile so retrograde a proceeding as the preference of a nephew to a grandson with Lord Canning's express assurance that the right of succession would in all cases be guaranteed to the nearest legal heir according to Mohammedan law, we cannot say; but a good many natives will certainly ascribe their conduct to some dark design of which they are as certainly guiltless, against the guaranteed rights and privileges of native feudatories. Mr. Dawson indeed goes somewhat too far in his inferences from the policy upheld at Madras; for the preference of a collateral to a direct descendant does not in itself offend against the main end of Lord Canning's Circular, namely, the assurance of perpetual tenure to every native chief on certain specified conditions. Nevertheless, people will be inclined to argue that if one part of Lord Canning's Circular can thus soon be virtually set aside, the more important remainder may some day be sharing the same fate.

THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In your issue of July 4th appears in a few lines what purports to be a substance of my evidence before the Select Committee on Indian Finance. Allow me to say that what I am represented to have said as to "the poor agriculturists of Western India being harassed with taxes," &c., is not correct. As, however, I understand that the whole evidence is to be published shortly, I do not wish to encroach on your space with what I stated to the Committee.

May I request the favour of your inserting the above in your next issue.—Yours obediently, KAZI SHAHABUDIN.

THE WAHABEES IN KASHMERE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—There are, it would seem, some men who never can do right, and who are blamed for whatever they may do. In your last issue (4th July) you inform us that a number of the ill-disposed in Hindostan (Wahabees understood) had been seized with a panic which had driven them northwards to join their brother fanatics in Yagistan. "As their road, however, lay through Kashmere, its Maharajah is said to have issued orders for their seizure and conveyance into the hands of the Hazara authorities." You doubt whether these latter will be grateful for the re-introduction of so much perilous matter which India could well be rid of, and conclude by saying that the Indian Government can hardly wish that his efforts to arrest their flight should be successful.

Permit me to say that the road to "Yagistan" which, in this particular case, is or was on the banks of the Indus, no great distance from Attock, does not lie through Kashmere at all, and I will venture to say that had not the Maharajah allowed these "ill-disposed refugees" to obtain a peaceable asylum in his dominions, or to pass through unmolested, a portion, at least, of the press of India would have condemned him at once as affording an asylum to the enemies of the British Government, while it is a very different thing to make the fugitives over to the Hazara authorities as prisoners, to driving them back from Kashmere into British territory to work their wicked will there or continue their flight by some other way.

It is not difficult to understand why the Maharajah is always in the wrong in the opinion of some people, who are constantly poisoning the minds of the public of India with tales of his evil deeds. Their "sweet voices" have, however, not prevailed in high places, in India at all events, as the Viceroy has recently assigned to his Highness a royal salute of 21 guns, a pretty fair indication that he does not think him the monster some people would have us believe.—Yours truly, * * * * *

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE MINERAL WEALTH OF INDIA.

The Madras Times holds that India, however rich the country may be in unexplored mineral wealth, offers no attractions to those European and American speculators who, armed with cradle and pickaxe, roam about the new world discovering unknown treasures as they go. The Indian climate, the Indian people, and even the Indian Government are all opposed to these pioneers of unlooked for prosperity, and if we desire to develop the mineral wealth of India, we must look to the Government for its development rather than to private enterprise. But Government is drowsy in the matter. Now and again, as in the instance of the discovery of coal at Chanda, it wakes up a little, and composes minutes, or we should say, sleepy sermons, on the surprising fact, but discoveries in one part of the country never seem to lead to discoveries in another. In a word, Government nods and snores once more, waiting, we suppose, until such time as the particular portion of earth it presides over shall become so weary of its apathy as to cast her minerals, volcanic fashion, on to the very roof of Government House itself. The natives, it might be urged, should discover and work the hidden treasures of the land. They are eager in their pursuit of wealth, and they have the advantage over us of knowing the country better than we do. True, but then their wisdom is, in fact, their ignorance, for there are but few natives in India who have any idea, or, having it, approve of mineralogy as a science. They go barbarously to work, when they work at all in the matter, and according to their traditions. We doubt whether, even where they placed in the richest portions of the Australian diggings, they would make much gold out of them, if left to themselves. They are further beset with superstitions; witness the diamond mines of Golcondah, and the plumbago mines of Vizianagram, of which popular report says that they have not been abandoned on account of their unproductiveness, but to satisfy the prejudices of the people or their priests. British science is what is needed in the great field of exploration offered to us by Hindostan, and it is a question worthy of consideration, whether a State mineralogist, with an efficient staff of assistants, would not well pay his expenses if deputed to survey the country with the object of developing its mineral wealth upon some practical system. A department of mineralogy, like a department of agriculture, or archæology, would doubtless sound very well, but a department of the traditional Indian pattern is not that which is required in this matter. We know only too well how such departments are generally organised. Colonel Dowb, "a staff corps officer out of employment, or Mr. Dowb, of the Bengal Civil Service, are not the men India requires to find new Golcondahs or canny Newcassels" in the East. If we are to attain any good profit in a speculation like this, we must find a geologist of the Murchison calibre in England; afford him the assistance of practical men accustomed to work in their shirt sleeves in the coal, iron, and copper mines of England, the gold mines of Australia, and the silver mines of South America; set him travelling, not from Calcutta to Simla and back again, but all over the empire, and upon a system directly contrary to departmental etiquette. Give us the men and the system we advocate, and then, and only then, may we hope for a practical solution of the question, whether India is really a country abounding in mineral wealth, as many people affirm, or simply an impostor it is desirable to expose at the earliest opportunity. We are inclined, for our own part, to think that a practical working system of geology and mineralogy in combination for India would educe good profit on expenses. When we consider that whatever knowledge of the mineral wealth of the country we possess is almost altogether due to the dilettante researches of amateur mineralogists, we may fairly expect that such knowledge would be greatly increased through the aid of men professionally trained for discovery. Indeed, the success already obtained by amateurs is sufficient to warrant great expectations whenever the Government of India, in its wisdom, sees fit to go about this business upon some better system than it has yet thought of.

PERMANENT SETTLEMENTS.

The Englishman holds that with a constant value of money there are very strong grounds for doubting how far a permanent settlement, even though embracing fixity of cultivators' rents, tends to increase the wealth of such an agricultural community as that of India. That is a large question upon which the most conflicting opinions are held, and which there would probably be very little purpose in our discussing. On the other hand, there can be no doubt that with a falling value of money,—the condition now prevailing, and likely for a long time to prevail in this country—fixity of cultivators' rents does tend to increase their wealth. But the tendency operates in a vicious manner, by throwing into the hands of the agricultural class, and in the first instance almost exclusively into their hands, what should be the common property of the whole people, wealth which is in no sense the creation of their labour, but of circumstances over which they have no control, and to some extent of the labour of the non-agricultural classes. Not only is there no virtue in such a redistribution of wealth as is thus brought about, but it involves serious injustice to the rest of the community, who, from the same cause that produces it, are paying more highly for all the necessaries of life, while the cultivator is getting higher prices for his corn. It will not be disputed that the hundred millions of capital that has been during the last twenty years poured into India for the construction of railways has had a sensible effect in depreciating the value of money, or, in other words, raising prices. It would be difficult to show any just reason for securing a monopoly of the benefit arising from this influx of money to the agricultural, and of the evil arising from it to the non-agricultural, classes, for so contriving that it shall enrich the one, and impoverish the other, class. Yet this is the tendency of fixity of cultivators' rents—a tendency which must appear the more monstrous when it is considered that, proportionally distributed, the money in question would have made the entire people the richer, and none of them the poorer. If the tendency in question is poor justice, it is equally poor economy. For, the fact of the cultivator being enriched without exertion on his part, eventually operates rather to check than to stimulate production. When we consider the question with reference to the public revenue, the injustice and bad economy of the policy become still more evident. The Duke of Argyll goes on, it is true, to say that if the Government thus adds to the wealth of the agricultural classes, it must put in force some means of getting at the wealth thus secured to them for public purposes. But if the measures adopted for this end are to be consistent with the avowed object of his policy, it is evident that he must take less in cesses than he remits in land revenue. At the same time the wants of the State are in no degree curtailed; and it therefore follows that the non-agricultural classes must be taxed more heavily. The result is this, that they are doubly impoverished, on the one hand by the diminished purchasing power of the precious metals, and on the other by increased taxation. The weight of the latter infliction is further increased by the fact that the Government itself is impoverished by the diminished value of money. As the nominal amount of its land revenue grows smaller and smaller in value, and therefore bears a continually decreasing ratio to its total expenditure, the amount of taxation to be levied from the non-agricultural classes continually increases.

DEATH FROM THE BITES OF A MONKEY.—It was mentioned the other day in the Indian Daily News that a native had been severely bitten by a monkey. Strange to say that the injuries received by the man have proved fatal. Dr. Hinder, surgeon of the Chandney Hospital, reported to the police that the man died at the hospital at 9 P.M. on the 5th. From inquiry the police learnt that the monkey had got loose, and was sitting on a wall adjoining the stables of Messrs. Hunter and Co. The deceased, a man about forty-five, had amused himself with some boys in throwing stones at the monkey. The animal, quite irritated at the treatment he received, descended and furiously attacked the deceased, biting him about the legs. He was immediately conveyed to the hospital, where, as reported, he died on Monday, June 5.

STATION TALK.

SIMLAH, May 29.—The Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab has finally decided to make Simlah his summer residence for the future, and has got his office now located here. I mentioned before that his Honour had taken "Oakover," but I believe, because the Maharajah to whom the mansion belongs having wished to let him have it rent free, his Honour would not remain in it, but has now taken "Innes-own," a house which was owned by General Innes. Mr. Havilland has come up in charge of the Lieutenant Governor's office establishment. I do not know what Murree will say to this move. The weather still continues wet, the rain comes down almost every day or night, and everything looks as if the rainy season had fairly set in.

NYNEE TAL, May 29.—The earthquake felt here at 9.30 P.M. on the 22nd inst. appears to have propagated its oscillatory motion over a very extensive area, as Almorah, Nynee Tal, Mussoorie, Meerut and Agra are shown to have been within the pale of its influence. It evidently did not take the form of a transitory earth-wave, as accounts from the various stations testify to the comtemporariness of the visitation. At Nynee Tal, however, it turned out to be one of a series of shocks, as two others followed at intervals of a few hours; one at about midnight and the other early next morning. I noticed the absence on each occasion of that subterranean rumble which is generally the harbinger of such phenomena. The effects of the several shocks on the lake must have been electrical, as the following morning the water was found impregnated with minute particles of white mud, which changed the colour of the mass of water to a very pale green. The clerk of the weather is getting incorrigible, and appears determined to send us the insufferable monsoon long before it is due, to the intense disgust of our picnic-going community. We had a severe thunderstorm on the 26th, which was accompanied by hail and rain, and lasted nearly all day. The hailstones at one time were as large as pigeon's eggs, and as it was blowing a gale all the time they were falling, a number of commissariat cattle, while grazing on the slopes of the neighbouring hills, were nearly stoned to death. The Municipality, determined to follow up the bazaar question, has addressed the Commissioner, requesting him to write to Government regarding the purchase of the depot married barracks and hospital, with reference to correspondence which has recently taken place between the Secretary to Government, N.W.P., and the Quartermaster-General of the army, regarding the removal of the convalescent depot to Ranee khet, which it is said must be carried out early next year. At a late meeting of the municipality that body placed on record that it did not consider itself on the same footing as other municipalities of large towns and cantonments on the plains in a pecuniary point of view, as out of an annual income of Rs. 20,000 it is called on to pay enormous sums for conservancy and repairs of roads, as well as for charitable and other purposes. Municipalities through some unexplainable fatality appear always sailing on shoals of bankruptcy, and our local body, whether from prodigality or lack of realisations, is certainly no exception to the rule. One, Dhet Ram, Chowdry, has come to the rescue of travellers on the Bareilly side, and has asked the municipality for the chowdryship, which has been promised him subject to his depositing a security of Rs. 500. It is hoped that this new feature of taking securities will have the effect of giving us efficient dak arrangements, as hitherto the genus chowdry pocketed the hire and trusted to Providence for the fulfilment of his agreement. Major Grogan up here on leave has received orders from army head quarters to rejoin his regiment, the 14th foot, at Cawnpore, consequent on the sudden departure of Col. Dwyer for England. The new Roman Catholic chapel was opened by the Roman Catholic Chaplain of Bareilly on the 18th ult. It is a very pretty little edifice, and most conveniently situated on the mall. The military, from whose subscriptions principally it was built, will not have the use of it for a very lengthened period. There has just been a sudden disappearance from this of a general agent, who found the new moon a good auxiliary to the accomplishment of his noctural retreat. He has left his goods and chattels as well as others entrusted to him to the tender mercies of his creditors, and is now enjoying a change of air in some other place. Tea-chests and divers other stores unclaimed are now, I believe, in the hands of the Assistant Commissioner.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

SIMLA, June 3.—The projected Camp of Exercise at Delhi and the new Department of Agriculture and Commerce have formed the leading topics of conversation here for the past week. A scheme for the former has been drawn up and submitted for approval to his Excellency the Viceroy. It would, of course, be premature to say whether this approval will be accorded, but this much, I believe, may be stated with perfect confidence, that the main features of the plan will be carried out. A force, consisting of some twelve or fifteen thousand men, organised in three divisions, commanded respectively by Major-Generals McMurdo, Travers, and Fraser-Tytler, will be brought out on the great undulating plain near Ghaziabad to be exercised in the different movements required of an army in the field. That they will in all probability be out under canvas for a period of some three months, during a portion of which time they will be under the personal command of Lord Napier of Magdala, completes all that is as yet generally known. It may certainly be surmised that the troops composing this force will be drawn in part from the military stations of Ambala, Meerut, Delhi, Moradabad, and Muttra, and be supplemented by those corps which will have to pass through Ghaziabad on their way to relieve others to the north or south. However little good the actual movements will do the troops, or however feeble a rehearsal of serious operations the camp may prove, this much is pretty certain, that it will teach the Commander-in-Chief and the Military Department one or two things regarding the capacity of officers in responsible positions which they did not know before. Shouting out words of command in a familiar rotation on an inspection day is a comparatively easy task, but when it comes to having to know what to do next, as well as knowing how to do it—it is a very different thing.—Pioneer Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

COURT-MARTIAL.—His Excellency the Governor-General has, it is said, ordered Colonel Lowe, of the Commissariat Department, to be tried by a general court-martial to be assembled at Rawul Pindee.

KASHMERE.—The influx of European visitors to Kashmere is no over-agreeable to the authorities there. Instead of the country remaining open to visitors, as during last winter, the Resident is to see all visitors out of the country by the end of October, and then be off himself.—Indian Public Opinion, June 2.

LEGISLATION.—Messrs. Wyman and Co., of Calcutta, have just published an "Index to the Repealed and Unexpired Acts of the Legislative Council of India, from 1834 to 1870 inclusive," by George Smoult Fagan, Esq., Judge Small Cause Court, Calcutta (forming Vol. IV.)

COLONEL LAYARD.—A special deputation allowance of Rs. 1,000 a month has been granted by the Government of India to Colonel F. P. Layard while on deputation to England with the Nawab of Bengal up to the date of his joining his appointment in the Public Works Department.

DEATH OF A LADY.—We regret to announce the death of a lady named Miss Broadfoot while on the journey to Murree. She was travelling with her brother and his wife, and was, we believe, in a weakly state at the time. Beyond Jhelum, during the night, she was attacked with heat apoplexy, which soon overpowered her delicate constitution.—Indian Public Opinion, June 2.

FIBRES.—The Fibre Committee of the Agri-Horticultural Society in Bengal have reported on the samples of Neilgherry nettle as plantain fibre submitted to them by the Government of India. The plantain fibre seems at present of doubtful value, being only half as strong as hemp. The Neilgherry nettle, on the contrary, is very promising. It is very like the rhea, with perhaps more tow, but beautifully soft. As with rhea the preparation is the great difficulty. The Neilgherry nettle fibre would, it is calculated, be worth about £55 per ton in London.

PREVENTION OF CHOLERA.—In order to prevent the introduction of cholera into the tea districts by imported labourers, the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal has ordered that whenever cholera has appeared on board any vessel or fleet of boats with labourers on board, the labourers are not to be landed at the usual place of debarkation, but at some place selected by the magistrate, at a reasonable distance from the station. The medical officer in charge of the station may keep the labourers under inspection so long as he may consider it advisable. In order to carry out this order, buildings have been erected and cholera camps established at Sibsagar, Gowhatty, Darrang, and Panchgram.

A JUST JUDGE.—Some degenerate Freemasons of Calcutta have been attempting to work on Mr. J. B. Roberts's brotherly feelings by making the "signs" when they appeared as defendants in his Court. "Now with what object it is done," says Mr. Roberts, "I do not know, but I feel it necessary to inform those whom it may concern that it is highly improper for any person to attempt to influence the Bench in that way. It is most objectionable, and I may say it amounts to a contempt of Court. If they think that it will benefit them in any way, all I can say is that they are very much mistaken."

MILITARY.—Among the movements of troops published in the relief, we notice that the squadron 6th Bengal Cavalry, now on duty in Calcutta, is ordered to march to Morar on being relieved by a party of the 1st B. C. from that station. If we mistake not, this squadron only arrived at the Presidency in January, having marched from Cawnpore to relieve a detachment of the 11th Bengal Lancers. It will, therefore, have been marched 1,700 miles, and spent two consecutive drill seasons on the Grand Trunk Road before it again joins its headquarters. If it is necessary to have these Punjab horsemen in Calcutta, why should they not be supplied from the nearest corps! And why, when the 6th B. C. are marching west, should this squadron have been detached 700 miles east?—Englishman, June 6.

NYNEE TAL.—The late earthquake at Nynee Tal seems to have had an unpleasant effect upon the lake there. The water has become quite discoloured, and emits a strong sulphurous smell.

REDUCTION OF NEWSPAPER POSTAGE.—It is directed by the Government of India, in an order published in the Gazette of India of the 3rd of June, that, in lieu of the postage duties charged upon newspapers under section 9 of the Indian Post Office Act, 1866, the following rates shall be chargeable on newspapers posted on or after the 1st October next, under the conditions hereinafter mentioned, which shall be additional to those detailed in section 10 of the said Act:—Rates of Charge:—Not exceeding in weight 10 tolas, ½ anna; not exceeding in weight 20 tolas, 1 anna; and so on, adding ½ anna for every additional 10 tolas.—Conditions.—The foregoing rates shall be applicable only to newspapers posted at the place of publication, and which shall have been registered for transmission by post in the office of the Postmaster-General (or officer exercising the powers of Postmaster-General) of the postal circle in which they are published, and which shall bear in print immediately above the address the word "registered," followed by the registration number given by the Postmaster-General.

KABUL NEWS.—Our latest advices from Afghanistan entirely confirm the suspicion we previously expressed that Yakoob Khan was being helped by Persia. Our correspondent distinctly states that the Shah of Persia has been backing him all along, and the Governor of Meshed is regularly assisting him with all that he requires. Thus assisted, Yakoob feels pretty secure in his new position. Meantime he is busy strengthening the defence of Herat, and organising the adjoining tribes. The tribes in the neighbourhood of Herat have joined his cause most heartily, and are assisting him in carrying out his plans. The Amir has at last left Kabul en route for Herat. Before leaving Kabul it was necessary to leave a governor in the city. Of all the men available for the office, he has fixed upon the most ineligible. The Amir had four uterine brothers. Three of these are dead, the only remaining brother being Mahomed Shureef Khan. During the life of Dost Mahomed, Shureef Khan was governor of Furrah and Girishk; he acquired great wealth, but his character was something like the Vicar of Bray—he changed sides just as it suited him, and was the most notoriously untrustworthy man of all the rival chiefs. The Amir has for some time back effectually prevented him from enjoying the little excitement of occasionally turning his coat, by keeping him in prison in Kabul. At the present moment the son of Mahomed Shureef Khan is serving with Yakoob Khan in Herat! Would it be believed that the Amir at this important junction has released Mahomed Shureef Khan from prison, has brought him to Durbar, has bestowed a rich khillut upon him, and has placed him at the head of Kabul affairs? Such is the case, and the people of Kabul are much dissatisfied. Shureef is well known to them; indeed, his common appellation among them is, "the traitor brother."—Indian Public Opinion.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, June 10.—The market remains in a very unsatisfactory position, and there is no diminution of the distrust which has prevailed for some time past. Grey Shirtings: Light makes, up to 6 lbs., are generally weaker. For 7 and 8½ lbs. there has been some inquiry, and prices of the former have somewhat hardened. Under an improved demand, values of the wide widths have advanced. Other goods have not altered since our last, and the business done during the week is very trifling. Grey Twist: A fair business has been done in 40's since last mail at our improved quotations.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, June 10.—Saltpetre: The weather has continued unfavourable for refiners, and prices of 5 per cent. refraction rule from Rs. 7 to 7-1. The demand has continued steady both for Europe and America. The stock in the market is about 650 tons. Rice: For the best white prices have risen, being now quoted at from Rs. 3-7 to 3-9; middling, Rs. 2-11 to 2-12, chiefly for shipments to England. Linseed: The demand for America still continues, whilst that for Europe has subsided, and fine bold grain, 3 per cent. admixture, may be quoted at 1 anna lower than last week's rates. Rapeseed: Good yellow, which is very scarce in the market and in demand, has somewhat fallen in prices, Rs. 4-13 to 5-1 being the present quotation. Raw Silk: Business continues dull, the week's sales having amounted to 145 bales only; prices continue firm from Rs. 21-10 for filatures, to Rs. 15-8 for middling native Jungypore. Corahs: There have been a few shipments on owners' account, but holders still continue to ask extreme prices.

Madras.

THE 19TH N.I.—It is rumoured that the 1st company of the 19th M.N.I., when disbanded, will in a body petition the Government. Each man in the company possesses, it is said, two service medals—for British Burmah (1852) and the Mutiny. It was expected that they would be disbanded on the 5th inst.

MYSORE STATE RAILWAY.—The Madras Herald hears that probably the Sappers and Miners will be employed on the Mysore State Railway. "They are," it is said, "first-rate men for work, and we have no doubt 200 or 300 of them would do more work in a day than a thousand coolies."

BURMAH.—The King of Burmah seems very sensitive to the rumours that are published about him in the Rangoon papers. He was so much annoyed by the statement that he was about to become a monopolist of all the produce of his country, that he publicly declared in open court on the 22nd May that he had not any such intention, and that if any person had been aggrieved by any action of one of the royal servants, he had only got to complain personally to the King, and a prompt inquiry would be instituted.

THE 18TH HUSSARS.—The Madras Athenæum's correspondent at Secunderabad, writing on the 2nd inst., says:—"The cholera in the 18th Hussars is, I am glad to say, gradually dying out. The day before yesterday there were two admissions and one death. The last return from the headquarters shows eighty cases and thirty-six deaths since the outbreak. Sergeant Priest died two days ago from sunstroke, and the armourer sergeant has also succumbed. They have a large medical staff with them, but unfortunately all very young, not a single man of experience having been sent, although several such are in the station. This has caused great doubt as to the efficiency of the B.M.S. in Secunderabad."

PUBLIC WORKS.—The Madras Government state that some time must yet elapse before they will be in a position to determine the whole amount which it will be in their power to allot for expenditure on public works, under the heads of service which are now provincial. It has been determined that the sums which are to be given from provincial funds for communications shall be assigned to the local fund boards of the several circles as lump grants in aid. These cannot yet be made; but, in order that the Public Works Department may proceed to the preparation of a detailed Budget for civil buildings and miscellaneous public improvement, the Government resolve to intimate to that department that a sum of Rs. 6,89,500 will be available for expenditure under those heads.

CROSSING OF THE KISTNA.—From a letter from the Consulting Engineer for Railways, Bombay, to the Consulting Engineer for Railways, Madras, which the local Government have communicated to the Chamber of Commerce, by whom it has been placed at our disposal, we learn that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company intend to provide boats for the conveyance of passengers, mails, and troops across the river from the 1st proximo, when the road across the river bed will be taken up. They have been endeatouring to get a small steamer in Bombay, but a suitable vessel has not yet been met with, and it may be necessary to send to England for one. First and second class passengers will be booked through to Raichore, and third class passengers will be taken across the ferry at eight annas each. Passengers' luggage will be booked through to Raichore. The road through the river-bed will be renewed as soon as possible after the monsoon, but judging from this year's experience of the freshes in the river, the Consulting Engineer doubts if it will be re-established before January 1 next. It is hoped that the bridge may be finished by the monsoon of 1873. There is a travellers' bungalow on the south bank of the Kistna near the ferry. The Consulting Engineer has proposed to the railway company to put up temporary shelter on the north bank.—Madras Mail, May 30.

FINALE OF THE 19TH N.I. MUTINY.—There was a parade of the corps in garrison on the Island at six o'clock yesterday morning (June 6th), under the command of Brigadier-general G. B. Shakespear, for the purpose of disbanding the No. 1 Company and quarter guard of the 19th N.I. for mutinous conduct on the 11th February last. The ground was occupied by H.M.'s 45th Foot, and the 7th, 17th, and 35th regiments of Native Infantry. The sepoys of the 19th, who were unarmed—their muskets having been taken from them in Singapore—were marched down from the Lighthouse Esplanade to the island, under an escort, and, on their arrival, the assembled troops formed three sides of a square, and the men of the 19th were then marched into the centre, with the 45th Foot opposite to them. The Brigade major instructed the Havildar-major of the 7th N.I. to read the vernacular translations of the Government Order of the 10th April; and, this being done, the company were marched back under escort to the Lighthouse Esplanade, where the men were at once paid off and dismissed. Thus terminates a chapter of blunders, reflecting on the capacity of a Commander-in-Chief, on the tact of a Governor, and on the firmness of a Commandant, in a manner so discreditable that the army and the public at large may well hope to be spared another such exposure of blundering incompetence that has given an air of ridicule to acts of undiscerning severity.—Madras Mail.

TWO PRECIOUS CONVERTS.—An English member of the Madras Bar in the enjoyment of some practice on the Malabar Coast, where Moplahs most do congregate, informed the High Court a few days ago that the Mahomedan church had had the good fortune of making a convert of him. He had commenced an action for divorce against his wife, on the plea, we assume, of incompatibility of temperament; the lady herself, who is much to be pitied, being, we are assured, morally blameless. But, as Mahomedanism confers on its votaries the unspeakable privilege of a plurality of wives, it was clearly a supererogatory task for the learned gentleman, after the change in his religious views, to carry on the case he had filed against his spouse. That his conversion is genuine is proved by his promptitude in availing himself of the rights of Islam; for early last week a young French lady proclaimed her belief in a mosque at Vellore, and was admitted into the fold of the faithful; and, on Thursday, the nuptials of the two converts, whose conversion was so opportune, was celebrated with becoming splendour. While the Maedanshom are to be congratulated on the acquisition of two precious converts to their faith, the members of the Bar of the High Court of Madras should derive satisfaction from knowing that they have at command, when knotty points of Mussulman usage tax the genius of the Bench, the rare experience of a gentleman who is an ornament to their profession.—Madras Mail.

MADRAS SCHOOL OF ARTS.—On the evening of Wednesday last Lord Napier presided at the anniversary meeting of the School of Industrial Arts, and the attendance of the public on the occasion was pretty large. The statement read by the superintendent of the school, Dr. Hunter, showed that the institution was progressing, and that several of the native pupils were employed in giving instruction to ladies and gentlemen, and they were also making satisfactory improvement. Mrs. Nursinga Row had been taking lessons in colour painting and sketching, and Mr. Ramiyengar very liberally offered Rs. 150 to be given away as prizes for the best landscape with architecture, and for the best figure painted from nature either in oil or water colours. A new department established in connection with the School of Industrial Arts was for the manufacture of colours for water painting and oil, and he, Dr. Hunter, was only sorry that the new School of Arts which it was proposed to erect in Madras, was not as yet an accomplished fact. Dr. Hunter also handed round specimens of photographs and sketches, and was of opinion that of late the native and European residents in Madras evinced a desire to promote the art of painting from the very fact that they had forwarded some very fine drawings to be painted, cleaned or otherwise repaired. There were many subjects worthy of being photographed in Madras, and among them was the mosque and tomb erected at Sydapet to the memory of Fuzeelut-ool-Nissa Begum, the favourite daughter of Wallajah, who died about thirty-four years ago. The Maharajah of Vizianagram had given much attention to the subject of pottery and modelling, and a carpenter and wood-cutter were to be sent to Vizianagram to work under orders of the Rajah. The First Prince of Travancore and some of the other native princes gave the subject of industrial art their attention, and the chief among them was the Maharajah of Jeypore. After prizes were distributed to the successful pupils, Lord Napier made a few observations on the success which had attended the school in the past year, and called the attention of native gentlemen present to some of the models exhibited in the school for the first time, which would afford them much information for carrying out building operations.—Madras Standard, May 24.

EUROPEAN VAGRANCY.—Passages to Europe have been obtained for about eight or ten of the European vagrants in the workhouse attached to the House of Correction. Most of these men have agreed to work their passages to England as sailors. Efforts are being made by the Commissioner of Police and the Governor of the Workhouse to obtain passages for the other men who are still detained there.

THE MONSOON.—The weather during the past four days has been of such a character as to lead us to believe that the monsoon has really now come upon us. Nearly all last week the wind blew steadily and strongly from the south-west, and on Friday there was a prolonged thunder-storm and a good deal of rain fell. On Saturday, Sunday, and yesterday the wind continued to blow strongly, and heavy showers fell at intervals. If we are right in our presumption that the rainy season has now commenced, it has broken much more mildly than usual, but the absence of a boisterous break may be caused by the stormy weather which we experienced a month ago. The early arrival of the rainy weather is causing a rapid exodus from Mahableshwur, Matheran, and Khandalla.—Bombay Gazette, June 13.

THE ARMY BILL AND THE CIVIL FURLOUGH RULES.—Officers in India are anxously looking out for the result of the army purchase question. There is no doubt that on that depends a great deal what steps will be taken towards facilitating retirement among Indian officers. It must be well known to the authorities at the India-office that the senior ranks of our army are clogged up with officers drawing full pay and not in any employ, many of whom are only too anxious to retire, and would accept any reasonable offer in the shape of a bonus. Some sensible scheme carried out with due regard to the interests of Government on one side, and the officers on the other, would cause many retirements, and not only prove a large saving to the country by relieving it of the expense of keeping these officers unemployed at full pay, but would give a slight impetus to departmental promotion in every branch of the staff and in regiments. Meanwhile all promotion is at a standstill. There is some talk of altering the furlough rules. The only real alteration that is required is some better arrangement as regards tenure of appointment. The furlough rules of 1868 are framed entirely in favour of permanent incumbents. The result is that an appointment is now never vacant except by death, and the work is carried on by officers acting on half allowance who have no chance of ever getting permanent employment, while their more fortunate brethren are enjoying themselves on good pay at home for two years, knowing that they have their appointments to return to at the end of that period. The tenure of appointments on furlough should be reduced to one year, leaving it optional for officers to take their full furlough for two years, subject to vacation of their appointments. If these alterations were effected, it would be fair for all parties, and the furlough rules would then be perfect.—Bombay Gazette Correspondent.

LITERARY.—We hear that Captain E. W. West is preparing for publication, and has written an introduction for, a diary kept by the late Rajah of Kolapore while he was in England.

MILITARY.—We are sorry to hear that it is even rumoured that our old favourite regiment, H.M.'s 59th Foot, is to be sent to relieve the 8th Regiment at Nusseerabad. True, H.M.'s 8th Regiment must be relieved after two years' residence at such a station as Nusseerabad, but surely some other regiment than the 59th might be found to do it. The 59th Regiment was only one year in Poona, and has been only one year at Mhow; it will, therefore, be very hard on the officers to have a third break-up within two years. If it is true in Scotland that "three flittings are as bad as a fire," it is doubly true in India, where removals are attended by so much expense.—Deccan Herald, May 29.

MR. PINHEY.—The steamer leaving for Bombay to-day will convey from our shores a gentleman whose sterling qualities have won for him the respect and the esteem of all classes, we allude to R. H. Pinhey, Esq., of the Bombay Civil Service, who, for the last eighteen months, filled the high and responsible post of Judicial Commissioner in Sind. To attempt to write a panegyric on Mr. Pinhey's worth would be like trying to gild refined gold. Suffice it to state that Mr. Pinhey carries with him the good wishes of the community of Kurrachee; his removal from the province is universally regretted, and will be widely felt. A more conscientious, upright, and honourable-minded man never occupied an official position in Sind.—Sindian, June 3.

DEATH OF THE CONVICT WHITWELL.—For several months past it has been known generally that Alfred Whitwell, who in August last was sentenced by Mr. Justice Bayley to penal servitude for life for his participation in the well-known Aurora frauds, has been very ill, and many may therefore not be much surprised to hear of his death. He died on Saturday afternoon in the Jail Hospital, and on Sunday an inquest was held on his body by Dr. Blaney, deputy coroner, when the jury came to the conclusion that his death was caused by disease of the liver and stomach. Whitwell became ill about three months after being imprisoned in the House of Correction, and from that time till his death he has been an inmate of the Jail Hospital. He first suffered from neuralgia and fever, and afterwards from liver complaint. He became very weak, and for the last two or three months was unable to walk without assistance, while for a month past he had been unable to walk at all. In January last Dr. Partridge, surgeon of the House of Correction, recommended that, as Whitwell was very unwell, he should be sent to England. Government, however, were unwilling that that should be done, and ordered his removal to the Neilgherry Hills, but Dr. Partridge thought that Bombay was more suitable for Whitwell than the Neilgherries. Government then ordered him to be sent to the Andamans, but by that time he was too ill to be removed.—Bombay Gazette, June 13.

DHARWAR COTTON REPORT.—DHARWAR, May 24.—The telegrams that have been received from Liverpool lately advise a steady market, fair Dhollera on the 19th instant being quoted at 6d. per lb. A few hundred candies ready Sawginned have been bought in Hoobles since we last wrote at Rs. 180 to 185, f. o. b. Carwar; and more business would have been done had there been more cotton offering, but the roads from the districts into Hoobles are impassable for cotton during wet weather. Owing to the price of ready cotton having advanced, dealers have also raised their quotations for delivery during the monsoon, and small purchases have been made of Sawginned at Rs. 165 to 170 per candy, board Carwar, November shipment, which is to-day's rate. There is no inquiry for Compta cotton, and dealers are unwilling to contract for this description, as the crop has been almost entirely spoilt with rain. On the most important trunk road for cotton, viz., that between Aneegeree and Hoobles, being a continuation of the one from Carwar to Hoobles into the heart of the cotton districts, the bridges have all either fallen down, or are in such a shaky state that carts are not allowed to go over them; the consequence is that the road will be useless the next four months, at the very time when a good road is wanted to bring cotton into Hoobles during a break in the weather. We understand the cause of this neglect is the want of funds, although funds are found to make comparatively useless roads, which had far better be spent in building bridges on a road already made. On the coast the unusually stormy weather reported in our last has continued throughout the fortnight. It has rained daily, and, although several pattimars have managed to put to sea when the weather has cleared a little, it is very doubtful if they will reach Bombay in safety or deliver their cargoes without being much damaged. At Carwar the arrivals from up country have been very trifling, and at Compta they have declined to about 400 docras per day. Bombay dealers have been the only buyers; the quality not being good enough for European selection, but the sudden close of the season has left those parties who lately contracted at Colaba no alternative but to buy whatever is sent from above ghaut. The port of Compta being closed, and the market at Carwar not likely to receive any further supplies until November, we give no more coast quotations this season. The steamer Shiraz, 867 tons, from Bombay, is expected at Carwar in a day or two, to fill up about 2,000 bales of cotton already pressed for Liverpool direct, via Suez Canal.

To London—Cotton, £3; Seeds, £2. 5s.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, June 13.—Grey Goods—Shirtings: In 39-inch goods the clearances sum up about 46,000 pieces in all, at between 6¾d. and 10¼d. per lb. Of Maddapollams, the clearances in all are 25,700 pieces, of which 20,200 pieces are 3 lbs., at Rs. 2-2 to 2-3 per piece. T-Cloths are still in poor request, the sales being 3,500 pieces 4 lbs., at Rs. 2-5 to 2-5½ per piece. Twist: The demand continues very active, except for the lower counts of Mule, which barely command previous rates; but in the higher counts of Mule and Water an improvement of ¼ anna to ½ anna per lb. has to be noted. Metals—Copper: An improved demand has been experienced during the week, and stocks being moderate, prices have advanced about annas 8 to Rs. 1 per cwt. Yellow Metal is also in fair request, at an advance of Rs. 1 per cwt. In other descriptions of Metals we have no change to report, the business doing being very small.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, June 13.—Cotton; The monsoon having virtually opened, business has now in a great measure closed for the season, and the purchases reported for the week only amount to about 16,000 bales in all. The tenor of the home telegrams, however, has imparted great firmness to dealers, and we have to quote an advance of Rs. 5 to 10 per candy. The imports for the week amount to about 40,000 bales, but these will almost entirely cease until the weather improves again. In other articles of export we have no change to report.

INDIAN APPEAL CASES.

MUSSUMAT THUKRAIN SOOKRAJ KOOWAR v. THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.—JUDGMENT.—This case was an appeal from the Court of the Financial Commissioner at Oude, as to property belonging to an aged widow, which it was alleged had been confiscated. The Financial Commissioner had set aside the judgment of two other commissioners. The case was represented as one in which great injustice had been done the appellant, and after litigation, which had been carried on for some years, final judgment was now given. Lord Justice Mellish took occasion in the course of the case to say that there had been great neglect on the part of some of the Government people, and it had been a long time before the petition was heard. Lord Justice James, in giving judgment, reviewed the facts, and pointed out the treatment the poor widow had received. The appeal would be allowed with costs, and their lordships hoped, although there was no application as to mesne profits, that the Government of India would act in a liberal manner to the poor lady, and award her a fair compensation, independent of the restoration of her property.

Their Lordships on July 5 proceeded with an appeal from the Presidency of Bengal, NOBOKISTO MOOKERJEE v. KOYLASCHUNDER BUTTACHARJE and others. It was an ex parte application, and judgment was reserved.

Her Majesty also held an investiture of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India. M. Ferdinand de Lesseps was introduced into the presence of the Sovereign by the Lord Chamberlain, attended by Sir Albert W. Woods (Registrar of the Order), carrying the insignia, and received the honour of knighthood, and was invested by her Majesty with the insignia of Knight Grand Commander of the Order of the Star of India.

The following Knights Commanders were then, in like manner, severally introduced, and received the honour of Knighthood, and were invested by her Majesty with the insignia of the Second Class of the Order:—

Major gen. I. Jameson, Mr. J. W. Kaye, and Mr. H. S. Maine.

A RETREAT FOR OLD INDIANS.

We have a colony much nearer home, with a climate quite equal to Tasmania, which has, so far, not been sufficiently known, and which possesses in this respect one great advantage—that it is comparatively a virgin soil. We allude to the small but fertile colony of Natal. Natal is situated 800 miles to the eastward of the Cape of Good Hope. In some statistical notes which are published by Mr. Mann we have his experiences of the temperature at Maritzburg, forty miles from the sea, for a period of eight years. During these years a freezing temperature was recorded at nights five times. About twelve days in the year the temperature rose to 90 deg.; about fifty days it reached 84 deg.; 115 days on which it did not exceed 70 deg. About eighty nights the temperature was not more than 50 deg.; about 210 nights it was at 60 deg.; and twenty-three nights it fell below 40 deg., 34·2 being apparently the mean lowest of eight years.

These figures give a faithful description of the climate at Maritzburg, where, for the greater part of the year, the wind blows off the sea. But the average temperature of what is called the coast district appears to be about three degrees and a-half Fahrenheit above that of Maritzburg. Now, to those who wish to find a healthy and genial climate we can imagine the above particulars of Natal must prove not a little attractive. To those for whom the politics of Parliament or the politics of society have no particular charm, and who do not think the attractions of a London season compensate them for the necessity of top coats and fires in the leafy month of June, we say, Begone to Natal, and leave your aguish feelings, your rheumatics, and your grumblings behind you. Let us see what such a one, with some ready money to invest, may do in Natal. The upset price of Crown land is 4s. per acre, and in all but the districts most sought after land may thus be bought. Coast land suitable for sugar and coffee growing sells at from £1 to £5 an acre. The planter may grow cotton, too, if he will, which he cannot do on the Neilgherries, and of the very finest description. He can also grow arrowroot, pepper, spices, and tobacco, and all sorts of grain for the use of man and beast are cultivated. Beef is about 3½d. a pound, and mutton just over 6d. The price of horses varies from £6 to £15, of mules £8. 10s. to £15, of draught oxen £3 to £5. 10s., and milch cows £3. 10s. to £7.

Labour has never been a difficulty in Natal; a predial European farm servant, who in 1863 had wages as high as £65, may now be procured for £45. Kafir servants in any number, with rations, per month 8s. or 9s. The population of the colony is now about—white 18,000; Indian coolie, 6,000 to 7,000; native, 226,000. The growth of live stock during the last ten years has sensibly increased the general wealth of this colony. Horses have been trebled (17 000); horned cattle quadrupled (340,000); sheep eight-fold (250,000). The entire extent of land under cultivation is—by Europeans 103,000 acres; natives 90,000. The colony contains in its several divisions nearly eleven millions of acres, about five millions of which have been granted or sold to Europeans. The colony of Natal, though it claims an historical position in the annals of European colonial experience as far back as 1823, when Lieut. Farewell entered into negotiations with the dominant chief of the district for a site of land, has not practically been known to us before 1852. In 1858 the imports of the colony appear to have been £122,832, its exports £100,587. In 1870 £429,527 and £382,979 respectively. This does not show a rapid if it be a steady increase.

But the colony has had seemingly more productive years of trade; for instance, in 1864, when the imports reached £591,686; yet, if we refer to the export tables, we find no corresponding increase, and we may therefore conclude that the colony was under one of those fits of extravagance in which infant communities are prone to indulge—a vice, by the way, which home "purveyors" are, we are sorry to say, fond of encouraging. Natal, in 1846, was buying more than it could afford to pay for; but its progress since seems a steady one, and its administration to be sound. The great want of the colony now is, it appears to us, that it should become better known. It is strange that the remarkable attractions which it possesses have not drawn a larger community to its shores; but, as we had lately occasion to remark, Anglo-South Africa has been passed by in the Colonial race. Australia has monopolised the attention of the immigrant and the merchant alike, and Australia has been overdone.—Asiatic.

INDIAN FINANCE COMMITTEE.

The Parliamentary Committee on Indian Finance met again on Friday, the 30th ult., A. S. Ayrton, Esq., in the chair.

Kazi Shahabudin, formerly deputy collector in Guzerat, was called, and examined on the land assessments of Bombay. Speaking of Guzerat, with which his acquaintance was special and official, the prospects of increasing revenue from the land depended much upon improved irrigation, which was much needed. Irrigation was expensive in Guzerat; it could be carried out by means of wells. There were roads in the Deccan, but few in Guzerat. If roads were constructed, they would, of course, increase the value of produce. It was his opinion that the gradual redemption of the land-tax in the provinces of the Bombay Presidency would be the best way to ameliorate the condition of the ryots. If the Government obtained a good price for the land, it would be a fair equivalent for assessment. The ryots in Guzerat were very poor, and if they paid the present cesses they certainly could not bear additional taxation. He was opposed to the decentralisation measure. It would, he thought, only have the effect of imposing new taxes. The natives did not like radical changes; they would rather go on as usual with the Bombay Government as their assessors than be turned over to the Governor-General. They would be found to appeal against decentralisation. The natives had a general objection to all taxes beyond the land-tax. He advised the separation of the revenue and judicial functions of the Government officials. The legal power in connection with the assessments was exercised, he thought, oppressively. New taxes came especially hard upon the people, and a large class had lately been alarmed at the Stamp Act coming suddenly down upon them. These opinions were the popular ones in India, and were generally made known by the native press. The Hindoo press itself is critical on the acts of the Indian Administration. There are no Mahomedan journals on the Bombay side. The writers are young men well educated in the native colleges and university now established. Some understand principles of political economy as well as Europeans probably. He had heard there was a kind of censor employed by the Government, whose duty it is to examine the contents of native journals, and translate such articles as he might deem politically objectionable. Whether the native papers reflected Indian public opinion fairly and aright he would not allow himself to judge, as latterly he had seen little of the Indian press, being resident in England. In reply to Sir C. Wingfield, the witness explained fully his reasons for advocating the redemption of the land-tax; the evidence showed that it would act as a much-needed measure of relief in the provinces. It would lead to improved irrigation and agriculture, promote education, and remove harassing officials. You would best ascertain the wants and wishes of the people if you really took them into your confidence, and did not leave them to the mercy of subordinates. Witness considered that taxation destroyed confidence in security of tenure. In the case of a redemption measure the money obtained by the Government thereby might be well employed in the reduction of the Indian debt. The money might be lent for irrigation purposes. The redemption of the land-tax would pave the way for improvements in cultivation, consequent increase of production, and enhanced prices. He considered that education lay at the foundation of the prosperity of the people.

In reply to Mr. J. B. Smith, the witness repeated what he had said in answer to another member of the Committee, that he would prefer to postpone education and social improvement for a time rather than that the Government should commit a breach of faith by imposing an additional cess upon a final and definitive settlement. The income-tax was objectionable because of its inequality, and because the mass of the population were too ignorant to understand that it did not apply to them, and were consequently liable to extortion and oppression. Indirect taxes he thought preferable to direct taxes, but declined to specify what he meant by "direct taxes." As to cultivation of the land, there was a great waste of manure, and he doubted if night soil would ever be much used in India, whatever might be the case in China. In the Konkan a labourer's wages seldom exceeded one anna per diem if paid in money; otherwise, he received a bare sufficiency of coarse food and a rug or blanket. The average consumption of salt was 28 lbs. per annum for each adult.

The Committee resumed its sittings on Tuesday, the 4th inst. T. L. Seccombe, Esq., C.B., was examined on home receipts and finances. The plan of procedure was to take total receipts and inquire into them item by item. An item of £25,000 receipt from the sale of the cable of the Malta and Alexandria telegraph being questioned, it appeared that the Imperial Government and Supreme Government of India had originally been at the cost of constructing this cable, India paying two-fifths as its share of the cost. It had been intended to carry the cable to Gibraltar. But an offer occurring, it was leased to Messrs. Gladstone and Elliot, and next, in 1868, to the Anglo-Mediterranean Telegraph Company. Their contract having expired in 1870, the cable came back into the hands of the Government, who, having no further occasion for it, and being unable to relet it, disposed of it by auction, the cable fetching £25,000. It was elicited that the cable had cost nearly £200,000, India paying two-fifths of the money. Mr. Fawcett ascertained that at the time of incurring this expense, the Indian Government had been borrowing more than ten millions sterling; consequently were paying for the telegraph out of borrowed money. At the wish of Mr. Fawcett it was agreed to admit a memorandum explanatory of the whole cost of the telegraphic line; and that Mr. W. T. Thornton should be recalled to give information respecting the purchase of the cable. On coming to an item of £10,000 repayment of excess of working expenses by the East India Railway Company, a discussion ensued, which brought out that the Government had certainly got this money, but it was all that remained of a large sum paid for constructing the Jubbulpore branch of the East India Railway, which had never paid its expenses. In answer to Mr. Crawford, the witness said it was not within his province to state what had been the business arrangements between the Imperial Government, the Supreme Government, and the East Indian Railway Company with regard to the Jubbulpore branch. Mr. Fawcett next took up and examined several Blue-books containing accounts of the Home Government, and complained of errors and discrepancies in the figures, or statistics, such as left him at a loss to know how certain sums were to be allocated and accounted for. It was decided to call Mr. Hornidge, who was the statistical clerk who prepared the accounts in question, to give the necessary information. Mr. Seccombe admitted there were remarkable discrepancies between the accounts of the Home Government and the Indian Government. Mr. Fawcett said the discrepancies consisted of important errors, involving sums as high as one million sterling, and even two millions, but witness considered that the hon. member over-stated the matter. Regarding the item £10,000 in the receipts for stores, which had been before the subject of investigation as a contradictory entry, the witness said undoubtedly there was an error somewhere, and he would have the two sets of account-books, as between the Indian and the Home Governments, examined to trace out the proper entry. On the receipts from extraordinary public works being laid before the Committee, Mr. Fawcett referred to the losses sustained by the Indian Government from the South-Eastern (Calcutta) Railway, and the hon. member requiring to know who was responsible for advising or incurring the cost of the railway, the witness said he believed that the Secretary of the Public Works Department would be the official connected with the Home Establishment to advise with the Secretary of State for India on such subjects. They would have had also the advice of an eminent engineer officer or two on the Indian Council to assist the Home Government in arriving at a correct judgment regarding extraordinary public works. In regard to engineering works, the advice of engineers of eminence was taken. The question as to the mode of keeping the home accounts recurring, witness said he would recommend that the account-books should be supplemented by a ledger for exceptional receipts and expenditure. The India Office kept no accounts of the capitalised property of the Government of India, viz., railways, and other public works, &c. The next receipt taken into consideration was the India 4 per cent. stock, £4,427,000, and the financing and banking business of the India Office was here gone into. The result proved that the financial arrangements were on a sound basis. The Bank of England make a charge for the management of the India debt. The lowest deposit with the bank is the fixed balance of £500,000. This was a balance the Secretary of State for India was bound to keep. When it exceeded that amount, the Bank gave no interest. In case of the balance being below £500,000, they applied to the Bank for a loan. The bank charged nothing for managing their financial operations, attending to disbursements, &c. In all questions of effecting loans, testing securities, watching the exchanges, &c., the India Office had the benefit of the valuable advice of the Governor of the Bank of England.

The inquiry was continued to ascertain how the cash balances were constantly maintained at the Bank of England. The witness stated that the India Office fairly went into the market to obtain their loans. Explanations were given in answer to Mr. Crawford regarding a recent loan of £8,000,000—raised by periodical tenders for comparatively small amounts. It was a plan popular in the money market, and the quotation was now 100 to 101¼. The stock was not offered on 'Change in large amounts, as experience proved that the present plan was found to answer best.

At the Friday's sitting Mr. Geddes, lately Officiating Collector of Pooree, gave some very striking evidence regarding the material condition of Lower Bengal, which province he was officially acquainted with. He considered that here irrigation works had not been remunerative, but that no reliable figures existed on the subject, for the accounts of land revenue and the irrigation rate were usually thrown together. He gave it as his opinion that while the cost of British administration in India was increasing rapidly, the ability of the natives to meet it was limited; that the price of food was rising, partly owing to the excessive cultivation of opium, stimulated by the desire to obtain revenue. He believed that if the British were no longer in India, the cultivation of opium, and the market supported by British gunboats in China, would decline, that the land revenue was only sufficient to pay for the 200,000 bayonets, which were our military means of holding the country we so heavily taxed. The native troops were well cared for, while the defenceless people were neglected, or, rather, oppressed. This was proved by the allowance made to the native troops when food was above a certain price. In the latter part of his evidence the witness expressed some extreme opinions of a democratic kind on the imperfections of British rule in India, which confirmed similar views propounded in a pamphlet he had written, and which Mr. Grant Duff quoted from.

The Committee meet again on Tuesday next, and are expected to adjourn for the session next week.

Miscellaneous.

Bills on India.—Tenders for £400,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 5th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £300,000, and to Bombay, £100,000. The minimum price was fixed, as before, at 1s. 10¼d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10⅜d. will receive about 12 per cent., and on Bombay at that price about 45 per cent. Those above in full.

Export of Bullion.—The following exports of bullion to India and China are the latest extracted from De Quetteville's Indian Circular:—By the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, per Candia, June 24, from Southampton—gold, to Bombay, £3,400, Madras, £1,863; silver, to Penang, £13,700, Shanghai, £2,750. The price of silver is quoted as bar 5s. 09-16d. per oz. standard, dollars 5s. 0¼d old, 4s. 10⅞d. new, per oz., 5 francs 4s. 11½d. per oz.

Madras Railway.—The following "letter of allotment" has been published with regard to the issue of the Madras Railway "new £20 shares," interest upon which is guaranteed by her Majesty's Secretary of State for India in Council, at 5 per cent. per annum:—"The board of directors, under the sanction of her Majesty's Secretary of State for India in Council, having resolved to issue additional share capital to the extent of £828,300 sterling, for the further prosecution of the company's undertakings, bearing a guaranteed interest of 5 per cent. per annum, I am directed to offer you this allotment of shares of £20 each, being your rateable proportion thereof as a proprietor of £ stock in the existing capital of the company at this date. The sum of £ , being a deposit of £5 per share on the above shares, must be paid at the Union Bank of London, Princes-court, on or before the 27th day of June inst., otherwise you will be considered as declining this allotment, which will be cancelled accordingly. Should you be desirous of accepting a less number of shares than are contained in this allotment, you will be so good as to return the letter to the office of the company, on or before the 19th inst., stating your wish to that effect, when an allotment of the reduced amount will be made to you. On the other hand, should you desire to receive an increased allotment, you will be so good as to signify to me the number of shares you would wish to have. N.B.—The bankers' receipt must be lodged at the company's office, and the deed of accession executed before the shares can be registered. Proprietors, however, who have already executed the company's deed in respect of other shares, can have the new shares registered in their names without their personal attendance for the purpose, upon signing and returning to this office the form of requisition, together with the bankers' receipt."

TUNKOO OTHMAN, nephew and heir of his Highness the Maharajah of Johore, K.C.S.I., had an interview with the Earl of Kimberley at the Colonial Office, on Saturday, presented by Major-General Sir Harry Ord, Governor of the Straits Settlements.

BANKRUPTCY OF EAST INDIA MERCHANTS.—This was a public examination sitting under the bankruptcy of Mr. Charles George Crawford and William Cruikshank, of Leadenhall-street, East India merchants, who were adjudicated bankrupts, after failing to carry out a liquidation petition, at the instance of Messrs. R. H. Ryland and Co., tea-merchants, of Mincing-lane, for a debt of £323. 13s. Messrs. Miller, solicitors, of Sherborne-lane, represented the trustee, Mr. Lovering, accountant, Gresham-street, and the committee of inspection. No statement of accounts had been filed, but it was stated that the total liabilities of the bankrupts exceeded £25,000, and total assets £10,230. 19s. 1d. This is according to the accountant's figures. His Honour asked why the bankrupts had not filed their accounts, and not receiving a satisfactory reply, and neither the solicitor nor the trustee being in attendance, the Court directed an adjournment sine die.

FALMOUTH, GIBRALTAR, AND MALTA TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The directors of the Falmouth, Gibraltar, and Malta Telegraph Company have issued a report for the six months ending the 31st March last. They state that owing to the failure of the Lisbon-Gibraltar section of the main line, soundings were made, which showed that for a distance of 130 miles approaching Gibraltar the cable is lying generally upon rocky ground, and under the influence of more or less current. It was, therefore, determined to pick up this portion, and relay it where the soundings indicate mud and freedom from current. The various improvements, which involve an expense of £87,000, being chargeable to capital, it is proposed to take authority at the meeting to increase the capital accordingly. The balance of the six months' working is £32,064. 17s. 7d. The cost of repairing the break which occurred in November, less the reserve, amounting to £13,554. 11s. 9d., has been written off, leaving £18,236. 4s. 7d. as the available net profit on the half-year's operations, and a dividend, on account, of 5s. per share has been declared.

ACTION BY THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY.—The defendants in this case (Wright and another) were ropemakers and general railway contractors at Millwall, and they sold to the plaintiffs a large quantity of cotton waste, to be used in cleaning engines. When the stuff arrived in India it was found to be in a heated state, and it was also found to be unfit for the purpose for which it was required, and was sold for a small sum. The action was for damages, on the ground that the contract had not been performed. The plaintiff's case was that the waste was to be of the best quality, according to sample, and that it was not of this quality. The defence was that the bulk, when delivered, was equal to the sample; that the sample had not improved in consequence of having been handled a good deal, by which dust and foreign matter had fallen from it, whilst the bulk had very considerably deteriorated through the heating. Further, it was said that the heating was caused by the waste having been sent out to India in zinc cases. The jury found a verdict for the defendants, but leave was reserved to the plaintiffs to move the full Court upon the construction of the contract.

WILLIS'S ROOMS.—THE TWO HEADED NIGHTINGALE.—As Allen's Indian Mail noticed the exhibition of the "Siamese Twins" in the metropolis about two years ago, we have been asked now to notice a similar lusus naturæ in the dark complexioned twin-girls whom Providence has designed to attach to each other, not by a mere fleshy ligament or band, but by the one poor child springing, as it were, out of the rib or back of the other. Sad as such an existence must be considered, the "Two Headed Nightingale" sisters are not only contented with their lot, but they are clever, and sing, recite and dance well, always displaying the most buoyant spirits. They come from North Carolina, U.S., where they were once slaves, but are now free by the law of America. Physiologists have proved that the co-formation of the children admits of the beating of a separate heart and lungs to each; that feeling is separate and distinct in the upper part of the body, but sensation is responsive in the feet. When the one girl sleeps so does the other, and so also they awake together. As many visitors to the metropolis from India and the East consult the Mail, we make no apology for calling attention to a genuine "wonder of the world" that has now been brought to London for exhibition at Willis's Rooms, in company with Mr. and Mrs. Bates, the American giant and giantess. Their stay is, we hear, short in their present quarters.

PUBLIC OPINION IN INDIA.—The East India Association met at the rooms of the Society of Arts, on Monday evening, for the purpose of resuming the debate on an address given by Sir Bartle Frere, G.C.S.I., K.C.B., on the best means of ascertaining public opinion in India. Sir Bartle Frere urged that the greatest rulers of India had been successful in proportion as they had consulted the native opinion, and he contended that the ordinary means of indirect representation were far two partial to be operative in any appreciative degree. He therefore suggested that the Indian Village Government, which have almost everywhere councils in their ancient form, and in somewhat of their ancient power, should be empowered to report annually on the state and requirements of the public works of the village, and nominate members to a distinc council, who, in turn, would elect members to a native provincia council. Major-General Sir Vincent Eyre, K.C.S.I., who filled the chair, expressed his entire approval of the scheme, and adduced the strongly-favourable testimony of Sir William Muir, Lieut-Governor of the North-West Provinces, and the approval of the Viceroy. Mr. Forsyth said his experience of the Punjab led him to the firm belief that native opinion expressed in local councils would be highly advantageous. The old days when the English officer was a sort of patriarch of the district, and went through the villages patting the people on the back, and hearing their grievances, and righting their wrongs, had been succeeded by a time when desk work prohibited the officer from mixing thus with the natives; hence the necessity for native councils. Mr. Hurrychund Chintamon said the natives were desirous of having their due share in the administration of the country, and the time had now come when it might be safely granted. Mr. Prichard asked what encouragement was given to those who laboured for the welfare of India when the House of Commons pursued such a course as it adopted the other day in respect to the Indian Income Tax Petition, stigmatising the humble prayer of an intelligent people as the shrieking and howling of discontented serfs. Mr. Trelawney Saunders urged that local self-government should be encouraged as much as possible in India; and Mr. S. B. Thakur expressed a hearty concurrence in the plan proposed by Sir Bartle Frere. On the motion of Colonel French the debate was then adjourned.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MONDAY, July 3.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—This Bill was brought in and read a first time, and the second reading was fixed for Thursday, the 13th inst.—Earl GREY complained once more of the late period at which important measures were submitted to their lordships, and suggested that Bills of that character might be reserved by the House of Commons itself for consideration till the year following, and then passed through all their stages by a single vote; they could then be sent up to their lordships' House at the very beginning of the session.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF PRIVY COUNCIL BILL.—On the report of the amendments, Lord CAIRNS thought there were two or three defects in this measure which would seriously interfere with its chance of usefulness. In the first place, it was not likely that any judge would relinquish an office the tenure of which was perfectly well known, to accept another which seemed to be so precarious. Then no judge would like to give up the services of his clerks, for whom the Bill made no provision. In the next place, the provision for securing the attendance of the members of the court were needlessly offensive. Lastly, there was no precedent for constituting a court like that now proposed, the members of which would be equal in rank, but would have very unequal salaries.—The LORD CHANCELLOR said that the points which the noble lord had raised had all been carefully considered, and he regretted to hear these references to small pecuniary considerations.—After some conversation, in which Lord WESTBURY, Lord ROMILLY, and Lord CHELMSFORD took part, the debate was adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, July 3.—COMPETITIVE EXAMINATIONS.—In reply to Mr. FAWCETT, Mr. GRANT DUFF said that candidates who entered Cooper's Hill College afterwards pursued their studies so as to qualify themselves for the Indian Engineering Service for guaranteed appointments, but successful candidates who pursued their studies elsewhere also had guaranteed appointments.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, July 4.—BANK OF BOMBAY.—Mr. WELLS asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether, subsequently to the report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the failure of the Bank of Bombay in 1869, another report was not made on the same subject; and, if so, whether there was any objection to its being laid upon the table of the House.—Mr. G. DUFF said that the only other report which had been received was of a confidential character, and, further, that it was now under the consideration of the Indian Government. Under these circumstances it could not be produced.

NAWAB NAZIM OF BENGAL.—Mr. HAVILAND-BURKE rose to move for a select committee to inquire into all treaties and agreements entered into between the East India Company, or any person on their behalf, with the Nawab Nazim of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, or his predecessors, and to ascertain whether such treaties and agreements have been faithfully observed by the said Company and by the Indian Government, and to what claims, if any, the present Nawab Nazim and his family may be entitled under and by virtue of such treaties and agreements. He observed that the claims of the Nawab Nazim had been enormously exaggerated, and that they did not amount either to a grant of several millions, or of a large annual stipend to the present Nawab. The Nawab of Bengal was one of three great rulers who were nominally subservient to the Emperor of Delhi—the three being the Nawab of Hydrabad, the Nawab of Oude, and the Nawab of Bengal. The Nawab of Hydrabad had a revenue of three millions, while the ex-King of Oude, who had formerly a revenue of two millions, received a pension of £120,000. He knew that the Under Secretary would contend that the Nawab had been a mere puppet in the hands of the English Government, but the earlier treaties concluded with that potentate showed that the East India Company were negotiating with a real Power. In the treaty in which the whole collectorate of Bengal was given over to the Company, it was agreed to give the Nawab £170,000 a-year for his personal expenses and £360,000 for the maintenance of Sepoys and horse-soldiers. In subsequent treaties the sum for Sepoys was reduced, but the amount allowed for his personal expenses was always about the same. The last treaty made fixed the allowances for personal expenses and Sepoys at £320,000. During the time of Mr. Warren Hastings the Nawab was under age, and the Company instructed the Governor-General to reduce his allowance during nonage to £160,000 a-year. It was clear that the Company meant that this sum should only be paid during the nonage, and that when he became of age that allowance should revert to the sum fixed in the Treaty; but Mr. Warren Hastings determined to reduce it permanently to £160,000. Even of this sum large amounts had been deducted by the Indian Government, and it had been impossible for him to learn the amount of the fund out of which this sum had been paid. While Lord Dalhousie was Governor-General of India a murder occurred in the hunting camp of the Nawab, and though it was not insinuated that the Nawab had the slightest connection with the crime, the whole fund to which he referred was converted into a book-debt without interest. He reminded the House that during the Sepoy mutiny the Nawab Nazim, who might have occasioned a serious inconvenience, acted as a loyal and powerful subject of the Queen. He trusted that the House would not refuse to consider the case, which had not received any fair legal consideration, to the redress of which no other Court was open, and which, if they cast out of this House, must produce upon the minds of the people an impression that their wrongs were absolutely without a remedy.—Mr. GILPIN seconded the motion.—Mr. GRANT DUFF said, standing out from the mass of Indian society there were three sets of persons who ought to be carefully distinguished from each other—first, native princes and chiefs, retaining even at the present day some political power; secondly, noblemen of high position; and thirdly, the very small class of titled stipendiaries. It was to the third class that the Nawab Nazim of Bengal belonged, and it was a mistake to represent him in the interesting character of an injured Indian prince. Neither he nor any of his ancestors was a prince. The present Nawab was the eighth successor of Meer Jaffier, who was an officer of the King of Delhi, and Governor of the province of Orissa, at the time when the English first became strong in India. Meer Jaffier was a puppet of the King of Delhi, and his position in Bengal arose out of the affair of the Black Hole in Calcutta. The dignity enjoyed by him and his successors was of a personal character, and was first accompanied by an allowance of £500,000 a-year, which was successively reduced to £410,000 a-year; £320,000; and lastly, £160,000, the amount received by the present Nawab. The position of the Nawabs was the result of three agreements solely of a personal character. The Government did not deny that the present Nawabs had hereditary rights, or a moral claim to a conspicuous and distinguished position in Bengal; but Sir Roundell Palmer and Mr. Leigh had declared that that was the extent of their claim. With regard to the action of the Indian Government in respect to the Nawab Nazim's connection with the shocking hunting transaction, they never accused or suspected the Nawab of having been an accomplice in that murder. They were extremely offended with the Nawab for making false representations with regard to his connection with some persons who were grossly implicated in that murder, and because he took back into a high position one of the chief offenders. He was punished by certain restrictions being placed upon his hunting expeditions, and by certain immunities being taken away from him. On account of his good behaviour, however, all the penalties had been remitted except one, and all would have been forgotten had not the matter been imprudently revived. The one penalty which had not been remitted made the third point; and he was perfectly sure that no House of Commons would agree that anyone should be placed in the midst of a civil society in a position of privilege and yet be exempted from the operation of the ordinary courts of law. As to the fourth point, namely, that relating to the allegations of the Nawab concerning the deposit fund and its alleged mismanagement and misappropriation, he (Mr. G. Duff) affirmed that nothing could be further from the real facts of the case. As to Mr. Torrens, he was a very injudicious adviser of the Nawab, and anything but a satisfactory servant of the Crown, but there was not one tittle of evidence that he was pecuniarily corrupt. They were told that the Nawab was an extremely popular person. In fact, it was impossible for a Mahometan to be popular with a Hindoo population. As to the excellent behaviour of the Nawab during the mutiny, no doubt he had behaved well, but he had been well rewarded for it. He had received £25,000 since his arrival in this country, to be made up to £40,000 on his return to his own country. It should be remembered that the Nawab was no Prince, but merely the descendant of Meer Jaffier, who was himself the officer of an officer of the King of Delhi. From the time of Lord Clive down to the present day the descendants of Meer Jaffier had been receiving £160,000 a-year, drawn from the pockets of an extremely poor population. He thought that he had now said enough to show that there was not even a prima facie case for a Committee, whilst to grant such a Committee would be to damage the position of present and future Governors of India.—Mr. BOURKE concurred in the views expressed by the Under-Secretary for India, and did not think that any good could come from granting the committee.—Sir C. WINGFIELD reminded the House that everything that would be given to the Nawab must be taken out of the pockets of the taxpayers of India, who already grumbled at the burdens which they had to bear; and, while admitting the loyalty of the Nawab, declared that the allegation that he had saved Bengal to the English Government in the late Mutiny was the language of hyperbole. He believed that the Government of India had made ample provision for the Nawab and his family, and that there was no necessity for the committee.—Mr. Serjeant SHERLOCK supported the motion.—Sir S. NORTHCOTE contended that the old East India Company, and, after it, the Indian Government, had behaved with great liberality to the family of the Nawab, and that the claims which were now set up on his behalf could not be sustained by reference to treaty stipulations. Under such circumstances he deprecated the opening of the matter before a committee.—Mr. EASTWICK also opposed the motion.—The House divided. The numbers were:—For the motion, 64; against, 122; majority against, 58.

HOUSE OF LORDS, THURSDAY, July 6.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—Lord NORTHBROOK gave notice that he should move the second reading of the Army Regulation Bill on that day week (Thursday, the 13th inst.)

THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF PRIVY COUNCIL BILL.—The LORD CHANCELLOR having consented to some alterations with a view to meet the objections of Lord Cairns, the Bill was read a third time and passed.

NOTICES OF MOTION.—Colonel ANSON gave notice that in committee of supply on the Army Estimates he should call attention to the supersession of colonels in the army by colonels of the Indian army, and move a resolution on the subject.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

THE NAWAB OF BENGAL.

The Daily Telegraph does not now enter into the rights or wrongs of the case raised by the Nawab Nazim of Bengal, but there can be no doubt respecting the power of statement, or the literary skill, displayed by Mr. Grant Duff in his speech of Tuesday evening. Such a speech deserves to be specially noted, for it was a model in its way. The story of the relations between Meer Jaffier and Clive, of the position given by the East India Company to his successors, and of the treatment which the present Nawab has received, was told with a lucidity, an orderly sequence, and a preciseness of diction which we commend to the study of those members who insist on treating dull subjects in the dullest of styles, and add to the difficulty of their themes by a chaotic exposition. The secret of Mr. Grant Duff's success is, that he had not only studied his case, but has given as much care to the form of the statement as if he had been writing instead of speaking. The members who take such pains with their themes may be counted on the fingers of a single hand. Most Parliamentary speakers fancy that they can make a telling address if they draw from the four corners of the earth a pile of facts, and then shovel them out on the floor of the House as heedlessly as if they were emptying stones out of a cart to macadamise a road. Hence the average political oratory of England is so bad as to excite the amazement of French critics. A French speaker may not get up his case so industriously as an Englishman does; but at least he is unwearied in the effort to set forth his facts and figures clearly, in logical order, and in the most pointed diction at his command. He strives to make the task of comprehending his argument easy, because he knows that thus the battle of discussion is half won. And at one time that was more often than it is at present the practice of English debaters. Pitt's speeches were models of arrangement and lucidity; Burke's were often masterpieces of literary workmanship; and Canning was at vast pains to make the manner of his harangues at least as good as the matter. Nearer our own time, Peel, Cobden, and Bright afford other examples of the labour which an orator may take off the shoulders of his audience by giving a careful attention to the order of his ideas and his style. But most members of Parliament supply only the raw material of speeches, and hence the lamentable decline of English political oratory. The public is indebted to Mr. Grant Duff for setting a better example by really preparing his address before delivering it to the House.

CENTRAL ASIA.

The Times observes that the lesson of the crisis in Afghanistan, the immediate danger of which seems to have been averted, ought not to be missed. If Shere Ali had refused to consent to a compromise with Yakoob Khan we might have found ourselves in a somewhat difficult position. If the pledges given at the Umballa Durbar meant anything, the Ameer was justified in expecting aid from us against either foreign or domestic enemies. Had we refused, he would have naturally turned towards Persia and Russia. Had we agreed to help him, he would have been likely to involve us so far as he could in a contest for influence with these Powers. These difficulties we have fortunately evaded with the aid of Lord Mayo's peace-making diplomacy; but it would be rash to calculate again, as we did after Umballa, on the continued tranquillity of Afghanistan. It was, in fact, the possession of Herat by a chief whose intentions towards us were doubtful that gave interest to the intelligence of the Viceroy's mediation in Afghan affairs. Herat, "the key of India," has always been jealously watched by Anglo-Indian statesmen, and when Persia seized it in 1856 we engaged in war to restore it to independence. Its possession opens the path for a hostile army across the Afghan plateau to the Bolan Pass, the least defensible point of our North-Western frontier. It is, therefore, imperative for us, if we would avoid even the possibility of disaster, to guard against every chance of surprise.

PRIZE-MONEY.

The Army and Navy Gazette thinks it need not do more than notice the silly argument of the Chancellor of the Exchequer that soldiers have no fair claim to spoil of war unless they can prove their title by a large butcher's bill. Far more logical and generous were the views of Sir Stafford Northcote, Sir John Hay, and Colonel Barttelot. Abstinence from pillage, and privations and sufferings in pestilential climates may entitle to all the rewards of victory—and few and rare are the prizes in the military profession—almost as much as "hair-breadth 'scapes in the imminent deadly breach." As to the particular question raised by Mr. Henley, who has an itch for nibbling at prize claims, whether there was not something of a sacrilegious character in the appropriation of the Abunas Mitre, we are not sufficiently conversant with the facts to determine the point. Probably the Abyssinian prelates, like European bishops in Froissart's time, occasionally take part not only in spiritual but carnal wars, and militate on mundane battle-fields, and if so, their personal belongings would be lawful booty. But this objection should have been urged earlier. The Indian Government has always forbidden the spoliation of temples, mosques, or pagodas, though their museum teems with curious antiquities conveyed from the holy places of the heathen; and Mr. Lowe, perhaps, might fairly have pleaded his religious scruples two years ago against the original grant of this booty to the troops, instead of haggling with the prize agent for thirty or forty times thirty pieces of silver more or less. Mr. Henley's argument was absurd. If there was any sacrilege in the matter it lies at the door of the Crown and its advisers, for the booty was taken and accepted as the property of her Majesty before it became the property of the troops, and it was competent to the Queen at once to restore these spoils to Abyssinia, and to bestow a suitable compensation on the captors. This has always, we believe, been the practice in analogous cases. As a mere matter of policy the niggard and obstructive treatment which soldiers now-a-days, in contrast with the bounty of former times, systematically receive from the Ministerial departments, appears to us to be an error of no inconsiderable magnitude. It is extremely injudicious in its effect upon the discipline of the Army. Our troops have refrained from pillage—or many a victory had been lost—from a sentiment that the pursuit of individual advantage should give place to the prosecution of military success, and that a grateful Government will cheerfully surrender all the minor fruits of these operations, the movable property of the vanquished foe, since the State which gains the conquered territory ought not to covet in addition the movables of the adversary. But if this compact is infringed, or if the ten years' strife for prize money—for this seems the average duration of such questions—is to be the normal consequence of every considerable capture, giving in fact nothing more than a post obit value to the share which many a gallant soldier claims, we must look for lack of discipline in war and infinite dissatisfaction in time of peace. Talk to any intelligent or well-informed private on these matters, and he will tell you his belief that the Ministers of the Crown deliberately retard and dispute the distribution of prize-money in order that the men who are entitled may die off, and that shares of intestate soldiers may accumulate in the coffers of the State. We are far from echoing this aspersion, but it touches a chief point of public policy that the reputation of the Imperial Government should be above suspicion in such cases.

Preservation of Old Records.—The last number of the "Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal" contains an interesting article on some old Dutch records of the Settlement of Chinsurah. Unfortunately the larger number turned out on examination to be merely registers of the wills of the old Dutch residents. In 1853 all the Dutch records of any historical or scientific value were handed over to the Dutch Government. Mr. Lethbridge, in the latter half of his paper, calls attention to the careless way in which Government records are kept, and contrasts it with the care shown in the office of the English Master of the Rolls. There is no doubt that in many a collector's office there exist records of great historical value, which are fast mouldering. The office at Meerut, for instance, contains an almirah full of correspondence relating to the district of Saharunpore, as all the upper part of the North-West Provinces was formerly called. These records certainly go back to the year 1800, if not earlier. They narrowly escaped within the last five years being sold as old rubbish. We would fain express a hope that whatever in these records, and the many others that are fading away in other Courts, is of value may find its way into the new Gazetteer. It would not be a bad plan for Government to order them all to be collected, and after careful repair placed under the custody of some one responsible officer. If no other person be forthcoming, the Curator of Public Books might surely take them under his care. If deposited in the Museum here, they would be always accessible and at the same time safe from the vandalism of officers ignorant of their great value. At present they too often form a scribbling-book for youthful beginners in a treasury office, or a comfortable nest (as at Ermakulam) for venomous reptiles.—The Pioneer believes that it is in contemplation to take measures for the examination of all old records now neglected and exposed to decay in the Government offices of the various districts. "May we suggest that the work of selection for publication (if publication as well as preservation be intended) should not be entrusted to a single person. An individual, whether lawyer, clergyman, civil servant, military man, or even man of letters, however eclectic and catholic in taste, would be prone to make his selection too exclusively in the direction of his own profession or pursuit. Thus it is curious how small a share military items furnish in the otherwise interesting volumes of selections published under the auspices of Mr. Seton-Karr. A military man on the research committee would probably have found much more of military interest."

Mails to India, &c.

The Mails to all parts of India, via Southampton, are now made up at the General Post Office, London, every Saturday at 8 A.M., and those via Brenner and Brindisi every Friday, at 6 P.M.

In the case of Newspapers, Books, &c., the prepayment of the postage is compulsory. Parcels must not in any case exceed 5 lbs. in weight, or be of greater dimensions than twenty-four inches in length, and twelve inches in width or depth.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

PROFESSIONAL OPINIONS

SUPPORTING AND RECOMMENDING THIS SYSTEM.

March, 1871.

I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of recommending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.

C. M. MILLER, M.D.,
Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. BROWNE,—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be overrated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out at all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys. H. EYRE, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.

For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of obedience and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the Government shall wisely insist upon every child being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.

Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere martinet. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly; have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.

It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and, therefore, succeeds admirably. JAMES RUNTZ, Head Master.

Kingsland Middle Class Schools, Sandringham-road, March 7, 1871.

Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites of youth, and if such exercise be conducted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor; but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained, the result will be all that can be desired.

ROBERT LANE, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon this physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To ensure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good disciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of these qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.

THOMAS WILSON, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies, Benyon-house, 32, Culford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their schoolfellows, a point too frequently overlooked, when a large number are being drilled.

Mr. John Pearson, 67, York-street, Wolverhampton, June 20, 1871, writes:—

"I had no sleep for five weeks till I tried DR. LOCOCK'S WAFERS, and I have not had a bad night since, and had such relief to the cough that I could not have believed."

ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, and all NERVOUS PAINS are instantly relieved by DR. LOCOCK'S WAFERS, which taste pleasantly.

Sold by all Druggists at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. per Box.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

BILIOUSNESS, HEADACHE, AND DERANGED STOMACH.—Recollect, reader, that most diseases come on with apparently a trifling beginning, which could at that stage be readily stopped, but, being neglected, other and more serious symptoms soon set in; the stomach becomes disordered more or less, feverish signs appear, followed by loss of appetite, strength, and energy. As a counteracter of these terrible symptoms it is only necessary to take moderate doses of Holloway's Pills, which will purify the blood, give a healthy action to the vital functions, and restore a robust state of feeling to the greatest valetudinarian. During hot weather, when the spirits flag from exhaustion, occasional doses of Holloway's medicine will recruit the failing powers and renew vigour.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff)

CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. WOOD stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Remedial Uses and Action.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

Extracts from Medical Opinions.

The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—"Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed."

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—"Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not 'supply a want and fill a place.'"

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—"So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases."

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.

CAUTION.—None genuine without the words "Dr. J. Collis Browne" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, June 20; Agra and Madras, June 18; Calcutta, June 17.

A PROMINENT topic in the Bombay journals received by this mail is the unfair treatment of the late Colonel Warden by the Bombay authorities. That able officer never lived to clear himself from the stain which his alleged mismanagement of accounts in the Abyssinian Transport Service had brought upon his character. His illness appears to have been aggravated and his death hastened by the cloud of aspersion under which he fell. A committee of officers appointed by Lord Napier passed an unfavourable verdict, and the Bombay Government refused to grant that further inquiry for which he and his brother, Mr. Justice Warden, of the Bombay High Court, pleaded so hard. In spite of failing health Colonel Warden refused to leave his post until the charges against him had been refuted or made good, and at his post he soon afterwards died, a victim in his doctor's opinion to the mental suffering caused by unworthy treatment. His brother then resigned the Service and memorialised the Secretary of State, pointing out the injustice of condemning an English officer of rank without fair trial, and rebutting one by one the various charges levelled against him. He further showed that certain officers who had examined his brother's cash-book at Lord Napier's request, certified to the careful way in which his accounts had been kept, and expressed their surprise at the abundance of vouchers produced in support of transactions and payments carried through "in the face of the serious difficulties against which it is known he had to contend." Mr. Warden's prayer for a revision of judgment has just been answered by the Duke of Argyll in a despatch that clears the late Director of the Transport Service from all the blame imputed to him. It is something for Colonel Warden's friends to know that his innocence has at length been fully established; but it would have been more to the purpose if the Bombay Government had taken a little more pains to examine the whole question at the proper time. No atonement to Col. Warden's memory can undo the mischief caused by the previous delay.

ACCORDING to the Punjab papers another serious raid has been made by the Akazais on the Hazarah frontier. Three villages were attacked and burnt. Full accounts of the outrage have yet to come, but according to the statements of the villagers lives have been lost on both sides. As soon as the news reached Oghee, the commander of that outpost at once hastened to the scene of danger. At his approach the raiders withdrew from the villages to the heights above, brandishing their swords and otherwise challenging their pursuers to come on. Their numbers seem to heve given them a temporary impunity, but fresh troops were marching on Oghee from Abbottabad, whose arrival would doubtless cause a change in the gestures of the so far successful enemy. No hint or warning of the intended raid had reached the officer at Oghee before the blaze of the burning villages caught his eye; neither had Atta Mohammed Khan been made aware of what was likely to happen.

THE Calcutta Examiner hears that the Bengal Government purpose making further reductions in the Public Works Department of Bengal. Four of the present divisions are, it is said, to be abolished, two in the Presidency, one in the South Eastern Circle, and a fourth in the Northern Circle. The saving thus effected will be carried over, we hear, to the outlay on existing or projected works.

THE members of the Bengal Civil Service Annuity Fund met on the 1st June to consider the Secretary of State's scheme for taking over the Fund, with all the accumulated assets thereof, in return for a guaranteed annuity of a thousand pounds after twenty-five years' service and twenty-one years' residence. His Grace's offer was accepted by a large majority.

IN Western India the rainy season appears to have set in with unusual mildness, only nine inches of rain having fallen from the beginning of the year to the middle of June. In Northern and Eastern India however rain has fallen plentifully all round. Some parts of Bengal indeed have had more than their wonted share, and according to native accounts Orissa has suffered from extensive floods. In the Balasore district it is said that the rice crop has been nearly destroyed. On this point however we may expect soon to have further tidings, for, unlike Sir C. Beadon, Mr. G. Campbell was about to see with his own eyes how matters were really looking in that part of his dominions. In Upper India the abundant rainfall was already working in concert with the depressed condition of trade to bring down the price of grain and other produce lower than it had been quoted for many years past.

THE rough weather appears to have wreaked its worst upon the luckless people of the Laccadive Islands. It is reported that those islands have been partly overwhelmed by a storm-wave following on a series of heavy gales, and that the natives have been reduced to something like starvation by the consequent destruction of their crops and food-stores. Certain it is at any rate that the Madras Government telegraphed for aid to Bombay, and that the Bombay Government at once asked the Superintendent of Marine to despatch a steamer down the coast laden with supplies of rice, salt, and curry.

THE proper relations between the pay of acting and permanent appointments in the Civil Service have long been the subject of warm debate in Anglo-Indian circles. This question, according to the Indian papers, has at length been taken up by the Indian Government, with a view to amending some of the inconveniences caused by the working of the new Furlough Rules. Much harm appears to have followed the frequent shifting of civil officers from one post to another in order to keep warm for uncertain periods, on greatly reduced pay, the places officially held by absentees in Europe. A circular on this subject has already, it seems, been sent round to the local governments with a request for their opinions on certain points. How to ensure a firmer tenure to the holders of acting appointments, without trenching on the guaranteed rights of absentees is the problem which the Supreme Government has set itself to solve. Its proposals to this end involve, we are told, nothing worse than "a slight curtailment" of the undue privileges which private interest can sometimes squeeze for itself from the local governments. If this be all, the sooner these privileges can be curtailed, the better chance will there be of restoring the impaired efficiency of the Civil Service.

DETAILED accounts of affairs in Kabul begin to come in. It appears that when Herat was surprised by Yakoob Khan, both Futteh Mohammed Khan, the Governor, and his son, Abdul Aziz Khan, were slain, and that two commandants of artillery were taken prisoners only to meet the same doom. In a subsequent onset on the Ameer's troops in Kandahar, a great many of the latter were killed or wounded, Aslam Khan, the Governor, being counted among the former. This seems to conflict with the later telegrams, which announced the death not of Aslam but of Feramorz Khan, and the rage of the soldiery against Aslam Khan; and, indeed, the story of the latter's death is contradicted in a later issue of the Delhi Gazette. Soon after his first success at Herat, Yakoob Khan is said to have sent his father a deputation with the Koran to ask forgiveness and reinstatement in his heirship to the throne of Kabul. With regard to Yakoob's alleged hatred of the English, the Delhi Gazette declares that any ill-will he bears us springs from his belief in Lord Mayo's approval of the preference shown by Shere Ali at Umballa for his youngest son.

THE Times of India asserts on seemingly good authority that there is nothing definite about the recent Turkish expedition into Arabia. The Sultan has formally disavowed all designs against Bahrein, Muscat, or the independent tribes of Southern Arabia. His sole aim is to assert his authority in Riadh, where Sayad Abdoollah-ibn-Faizul, his Kaimakan or Deputy, has been driven out by his brother Saood. The bulk of the expedition has disembarked at Khatif. Her Majesty's war steamers Bullfinch and Magpie are watching the course of affairs in the Gulf, although the Turks appear to have nothing but transports in that direction, and repudiate all idea of naval warfare. Sayad Saood is said to have a large army posted for defence. The feeling of the country, whichever way it tended at first, appears to be running strongly on his side ever since it was known that Turkish troops had landed in answer to the prayers of Abdoollah for help against his brother.

A Times telegram of July 14 from Calcutta asserts that Yakoob Khan arrived at Kabul on the night of July 5. In the private interview which then took place between him and the Ameer nothing important seems to have occurred. As if distrustful of his father's good faith, which probably stands no higher than that of most Afghans, Yakoob had armed himself with a copy of the Koran.

WE should have thought that after more than three centuries the bones of Vasco de Gama, the great Portuguese Admiral and Viceroy, who first sailed to India round the Cape of Good Hope, itself at that time a recent discovery, might as well have remained in their ancient resting-place at Lisbon, whither his body was borne a few months after his last appearance in Goa. Such however is not the opinion of the Portuguese authorities, who have resolved to ship off to Goa the remains of Almeida's short-lived successor. Their arrival at Goa is, we are told, to be celebrated with floral games and popular rejoicings. If Vasco de Gama stood to Portuguese India as it is, in the same relation as Clive does to the British India of to-day, there might be ground for the expected rejoicings; but in view of what Portuguese India is now, the reason for such rejoicings can hardly be said to explain itself.

WHATEVER may be said of Sir R. Temple's financial ability, it cannot be denied that he is more fortunate than some financiers of higher repute. The high prices of opium at the present time are likely to increase the opium estimates for the year by more than a million sterling, while more than two crores of rupees, or two millions sterling, will fall into the right side of his accounts from the accumulated capital of the Bengal Civil Service Annuity Fund. Against this latter windfall must of course be set the yearly charge for retiring annuities which the Government will henceforth have to provide. But after all deductions Sir Richard will obtain a surplus for whose application many better ways can be found than the usual process of placing a year's surplus to the credit of the cash balances for the year.

ON the 11th current a goodly number of merchants and other persons interested in the trade with the Far East met at the London Tavern to consider the practice, adopted by shipowners since the opening of the Suez Canal, of excluding from their bills of lading the clauses which used to make them liable for the ordinary carriage of goods. Messrs. Crawford, Magniac, and Tozer, all spoke to much purpose against changes which transferred all the risks from the shipowners to the shippers. Among other novelties to which they objected is the frequent practice of requiring payment for freight before the goods are examined, landed, or weighed. Mr. Magniac especially enlarged on the difficulty, not to say the impossibility, of conducting business on conditions which left the shipper almost entirely at the mercy of a dishonest shipowner. It was unanimously resolved to form a committee of merchants, who should consider the whole question, and confer with the shipowners and underwriters for the purpose of adopting a fair general form for all bills of lading, and revising the present mode of settling freight. The members of the committee were then named, with power to increase their number, and a general subscription was also voted towards carrying out the essential objects of the meeting.

THE threatened debate on the Army Bill began last Thursday in the House of Lords with a well-considered speech from Lord Northbrook, which cut away the very grounds of the amendment proposed by the Duke of Richmond. After Lord Northbrook had explained the purport of the Army Bill, and unfolded the comprehensive scheme that lay behind it, his opponents could only fight for a shadowy issue. The Duke of Richmond accordingly fell back on the assertion that Lord Northbrook's speech was "a mass of details without any connecting link," and went in for a regular hum-drum defence of the purchase system, in which he was followed by Lord Dalhousie. We need not try and thresh that old chaff over again. In all the speeches on one side there was the old stereotyped unmeaning eulogy of the funny old system which fills the commissioned ranks of our army with uninstructed loungers, shy of real work but eager to gain a footing in polite society. Earl Grey indeed gave a rather new turn to the discussion by denouncing selection as a substitute for purchase, and the Marquis of Hertford defended purchase for the very odd reason that in his regiment forty men had risen from the ranks. But it was not till Friday night that the debate moved outside the charmed circle in which it had been started; and oddly enough it was Earl Russell who performed that piece of disservice to his own party. His chief objection to the Army Bill lay in his avowed mistrust of Ministerial assurances, especially when so stiff-necked a theorist as Mr. Stansfeld wielded a commanding influence in the Cabinet. But his Lordship's talents in upsetting the Liberal coach were sure to be exercised anew on the first tempting opportunity. Lord Carnarvon delivered a fierce but antediluvian attack on Mr. Cardwell's scheme, and Lord Melville was absurd enough to demand a standing army of a hundred thousand men for England alone, besides any number of militia and volunteers. Of course, too, somebody quoted the Duke of Wellington's old remarks about sporting gentlemen making good officers in the field—a very good argument had it been used in the days before the Crimean War, but hardly pertinent to the sterner conditions of modern warfare.

THE heaviest blows on the other side were dealt by Lord Sandhurst, the Duke of Cambridge, the Earl of Derby, and Lord Lawrence. Barring a rather foolish figure of speech with regard to the purchase of a regimental colonelcy, Lord Sandhurst spoke with his usual mastery of military subjects. No one had a better right than he to affirm that "our system" was a system of chance, "a system of seniority among those who had money." Very significant were the words in which he deprecated the rejection of a measure which can only come up again in a less inviting form than ever. "Save us from our so-called friends" must now be the prayer of every officer anxious to secure the liberal terms which, according to the Duke of Cambridge, have been offered in the present Bill. Very shrewd too was Lord Derby's protest against "hanging up the question till the opinion of the constituencies was taken upon it." Purchase, as he truly observed, is indeed a "dead horse," and there is no use trying to set him on his legs again, to the great inconvenience of the service as it is, and the inevitable loss hereafter of the officers specially concerned. His parting words on the purchase question should be well weighed by those who pass their votes upon it to-night. "Get rid of it whilst the public mind is in favour of a liberal settlement, and when you will not be obliged to commit a wrong or an injustice."

In the course of debate, reference was naturally made to the distinguished services of non-purchase officers in India. In the midst of the rubbish spoken in Parliament about the principle of selection, it is encouraging to find the Marquis of Huntly quoting in behalf of that principle the great deeds of soldiers like Neill and Outram. Lord Lawrence never spoke truer words than those in which he bore witness to the superior worth of high training and real culture in the commissioned ranks of the army. His varied experience has shown him how absurd it is to look for thorough efficiency from a body of officers who rise by purchase, and are certain of so rising. In all cases of selection for a difficult command, he would "unhesitatingly give the preference to the best educated," remembering as he did "the brilliant services rendered during the Mutiny by members of the Scientific Corps." Here Lord Lawrence appeals to well-known facts, which no one at all acquainted with the service will honestly venture to dispute. It is a fact beyond all question that far the best English officers as a whole have always belonged to non-purchase corps, especially to scientific services like the artillery and engineers. And these corps have furnished not only the best officers, but the best types of English gentlemen, the very cream of good English society; officers of whom, both socially and professionally, England might well be proud. Culture alone may not make the gentleman, but it is the gentleman who benefits most from culture, and enjoys the best chance of earning distinction in the sphere of culture. Give him and the boor an even start in that race, and there is very little doubt which will prove the winner, if the gentleman tries his best.

The adjourned discussion on the question raised by Sir B. Frere's paper as to the best mode of ascertaining public opinion in India is to be resumed at the meeting of the East India Association, on Wednesday next. Sir Bartle Frere's paper, one of the best that has ever come from his masterly pen, leads up to a taking scheme for utilising the old village-councils of India. Sir Bartle would enlarge their numbers and develop their powers in respect of roads, schools, police, and suchlike matters of common interest. From these little councils might be elected a larger or district council, each village choosing one or two, and each larger village or town two or more delegates. Freeholders of one or more villages should have seats in their own right. To this body should be entrusted the management of all district funds for roads, schools, and police, and it should have a consultative voice in all things pertaining to the district. These district councils again would send up delegates to the Provincial Council, which should be further composed of chiefs and jagheerdars, collectors, magistrates, political agents, and officers from the uncovenanted services, with a revenue or political officer of the highest rank for president. Bombay might have five such councils, each mainly representing "men of like speech" and geographical connection. From these should be chosen members of the highest local council, which would represent the whole province, and legislate as well as advise. This plan, which is certainly ingenious, Sir Bartle Frere ingeniously supports with arguments that appeal to our common sense. We for our part have small objection to make against any scheme which would place the natives of India in closer political harmony with ourselves. We have always insisted that the time has come for giving them a larger voice in the management of their own affairs, the best form of political education which any people with the smallest capacity for walking alone can receive.

The next mail viâ Brindisi will be due in London upon Saturday next.

INDIAN SURVEYS.

Of all the great things ever done by Englishmen in India, none can equal in certain respects the services which so many of them have rendered to the cause of physical science. Rich as it is in feats of war and of political enterprise, the history of British India contains no brighter pages than those which record the fruits of English energy and perseverance in the field of scientific research. To the memory of those successful soldiers who won and helped to govern India due justice has generally been done by English chroniclers and statesmen; but few of our countrymen are probably aware of the great debt we owe to the men whose quiet labours in more peaceful, if not even more perilous fields, have at length found a fitting historian in the present head of the Geographical Department at the India Office. Mr. Clements Markham deserves the best thanks of all who take interest in the general progress of India for his full and interesting Memoir on the Indian Surveys.* The amount of labour he has bestowed on this careful retrospect of all that has yet been done by members of the Indian Services, to enlarge the bounds of our antiquarian and topographic lore regarding India, must have been all the greater for the mass of documents he had to explore, as also for the many he failed to recover. So thoroughly however has he carried out his researches with the help of still surviving officers of the Indian Navy, that very few gaps in the past remain to fill, and the true extent of our obligations to the pioneers of scientific progress who made his own efforts possible can at last be measured with some approach to accuracy.

The earliest surveys of modern India date from the first years of the 17th century, when Hakluyt and Purchas were Historiographers to the East India Company, and the captains of the Company's merchant fleet committed to their logs all that seemed worth recording on their long voyages to and fro. In the work of marine surveying the officers of the old Bombay Marine, afterwards converted into the Indian Navy, played a conspicuous part. It was in one of the Company's cruisers that Lord Valentia in 1805 surveyed the coast and channel of the Red Sea. Captain Daniel Ross surveyed the Canton River, the Gulf of Pechili, and the coast of Arrakan in the first quarter of the present century. Captain Horsburgh compiled a number of charts, for which he received the thanks and guineas of the East India Company. In 1820 Captain Brucks began his survey of the Persian Gulf. A few years later Sir C. Malcolm, brother to the better-known Sir John, instituted fresh surveys of the Red Sea. Lieutenant Carless, who afterwards surveyed the mouths of the Indus, Lieutenant Wellsted, Captain Moresby, and Captain Elwon, bequeathed the precious fruit of much perilous toil in the shape of charts and records which have saved many a subsequent navigator from the hidden snares of an intricate channel and a reef-bound shore. Under Moresby the survey of the Maldives was thoroughly carried out by Lieutenants Young and Christopher in 1835. Haines and his able officers examined in 1837 the South Coast of Arabia, and Carless a few months later surveyed the African Coast about Cape Guardafui. Good work had meanwhile been done by Whitelock and Ethersey under great difficulties along the western coast of Kattiwar, the water washing up to Ethersey's ankles under the cabin-table of the wretched pattamar in which he was content to sail.

* "A Memoir on the Indian Surveys." By Clements R. Markham. London: Wm. H. Allen and Co. 1871.

The exploration of the Indus brought out the zeal and skill of many bold officers, foremost among whom were Burnes, Delhoste and Wood. Besides being the first European after Marco Polo who had ever reached the Bam-i-Doonya in Koondooz, Wood received the gold medal of the Geographical Society for discovering the sources of the Oxus. Less fortunate proved Lieut. Wybурd, of whom nothing more was ever heard after he had made his way into Central Asia. Further discoveries regarding the mouths of the Indus were made in 1846 by Capt. Selby, with the aid of Messrs. Taylor and Stroyan. The latter followed his commander in a trigonometrical survey of the Indian coast, from Cape Comorin to Beypoor and the Laccadives, while Taylor, with several comrades, explored the Gulf of Kutch and the Kattiwar Coast with results important to the cotton trade of Guzerat. The successful labours of Selby, Christopher, Rennie, Constable, Sanders, Grieve, and Dr. Carter added largely to our knowledge of the Arabian and Indian coasts and the seas adjacent. Much useful work was also got through at the same time by Captain Lloyd on the Bengal side, with his able helpmates, Young, Fell, Rennie, and Montriou. Surveys of the Hooghly, the Mutlah, the Bay of Bengal, and of the chief Burman rivers, were carried out from 1850 onwards by Ward, Heathcote, Rennie, and Sweny. To the Indian Navy is also due the chief credit of the surveys effected throughout Mesopotamia. For more than twenty-six years Captains Lynch, Jones, and Selby, and other accomplished officers, continued their researches "in the face of great difficulties and dangers," exploring the whole course of the Tigris and Euphrates, and pushing their surveys westward in the teeth of an evil climate and roving Arabs into the little known countries on the Persian border. Bewsher, who succeeded Selby in 1862, fell a victim to diseases contracted in this trying service, but not before he had given good proofs of his fitness to carry on the work so brilliantly begun.

To Lieutenant Taylor was entrusted the further survey of the west coast of India southward of Bombay, a task which he thoroughly accomplished between 1853 and 1859. The coast from Boria to Bombay was afterwards examined by Lieutenant Williams. Marshall's survey of the Andaman Islands in 1860 resulted in discovering a misreckoning of eleven miles in the position of those islands westwards. Mistakes of like importance were rectified by Captain Constable in the geography of the Persian Gulf during a cruise which lasted from 1857 to 1860. The example set by Major Rennell in studying the winds and currents of Indian seas was successfully followed by Lieutenants Taylor, Heathcote, and Fergusson, in respect of the Arabian Sea, the Bay of Bengal, the Red Sea, the Persian Gulf, and the Indian and Chinese Seas. Foremost however in this line of research stands the name of Captain Piddington, whose studies of cyclones and hurricanes ended in the discovery that all such storms are circular, turning as they advance on the north of the equator from right to left. Their paths and rates of movement were ascertained by the same zealous explorer, whose discoveries formed the base of subsequent additions made to our knowledge of this branch of science by Dr. Burst, Lieutenant Fergusson, Mr. Franklin, and other workers in the same field. Unhappily for the cause of science the ill-judged abolition of the noble Indian Navy in 1862 put a sudden stop to the work its officers had been doing so well. Heaps of valuable records were "reduced to pulp," many of the surveys were left unfinished, and up to this time very little has been done by the Admiralty to fill up the places of those naval heroes whose peaceful services Mr. Markham has striven to rescue from undeserved oblivion. An ampler record of their achievements alike in peace and war is greatly to be desired. Meanwhile we are glad to learn from Mr. Markham that "the whole subject of Marine Surveys is about to receive the serious consideration of the Government."

To the land surveys of British India the bulk of the present volume is necessarily devoted. Their history dates from the days of Clive, under whom served Major Rennell, the father of Indian Geography. Eight years after the Battle of Plassy, Rennell was gathering materials for a map of the newly-conquered provinces of Bengal and Bahar, which, after superseding the work of M. d'Anville, has since been displaced by the maps of the Revenue Survey. Rennell's labours were ably followed up by his successors, Colonels Call and Wood. Under the former, Colonels Pearse and Kelly and Captain Pringle took many useful observations in Bengal and Madras, while Mr. Reuben Burrow surveyed the valley of the Ganges as far as Hurdwar. Under Colonel Wood Mysore was mapped out by Colebrooke, the road from Delhi and Agra to Gwalior and Oojein was surveyed by Dr. Hunter, and part of the Deccan by Lieutenant Emmitt. Moncrieff and Reynolds were equally active on the Bombay side, while Lieut. Wood threw welcome light on the topography of Burmah.

All this happened before the nineteenth century. Since then the great Trigonometrical Survey, begun by Lambton in 1800, has covered nearly all India with a network of primary triangles. Major Lambton found ready support from Sir Arthur Wellesley for his plan of accurately surveying all India. Madras was the centre of his operations which date from the spring of 1802 and were carried on until death cut short his labours in 1823. Colonel Everest then took up the guidance of the work on which he had for some years been employed under his late chief, and zealously did he carry it on under difficulties of the hardest kind, including want of hands and a severe illness. Forced home by his shattered health, he left a trustworthy substitute during his absence in Mr. J. Oliver, who carried the survey from Sironj to Calcutta over 700 miles of difficult country. On his return from five years of well spent rest in England Everest resumed his post, working his way with the help of Oliver, Waugh, Rossenrode, and Renny, up into the woody Dehra Doon, whose base in 1836 was at length connected with that formed on the Sironj plain in 1824. The Great Arc Series, completed in 1840, covered an area of 56,997 square miles. Everest likewise completed the Bombay Longitudinal Series, and pushed some way forward his scheme for covering Bengal and Bahar with a gridiron of triangles. His projected revision of Rennell's famous old survey was carried far towards completion by Boileau, Renny, Macdonald, and Waugh, before Everest quitted the scene of his splendid labours in 1843. No fitter successor to brave old Colonel Lambton could have been found to continue the work that officer had so well begun. "No scientific man," says Mr. Markham, "ever had a grander monument to his memory than the great Meridional Arc of India. Everest's was a creative genius. The whole conception of the survey, as it now exists, was the creation of his brain . . . nearly everything in the surveys was originated by the great geodesist." One of his very best assistants, Sir Andrew Waugh, stepped into his vacant place. But for the rest of Mr. Markham's story we must ask our readers to wait till the next number.

OFFICERS ACTING FOR QUARTERMASTERS.—Under the authority of the Secretary of State for India, the Governor General in Council is pleased to notify that an officer, acting for a quartermaster or riding master who is under arrest, shall receive an allowance of two shillings per diem, the amount to be deducted from the pay of the permanent incumbent, if found guilty of the offence for which he shall have been tried.

INCREASE OF TAXATION IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—One of the questions of the day is, how, honourably, to increase taxation in Bengal, and in other permanently settled parts of India?

There can be no doubt that these parts can bear increased taxation without difficulty. How then can it be raised consistently with British honour?

Under a constitutional Government the theory is that the people tax themselves. Under a despotic Government taxation is a contract between the sovereign and his subjects.

A despotic Government like that of India cannot be too careful in avoiding any breach of its solemn contracts. Where power is on one side, and weakness on the other, a breach of promise may appear easy to effect, but fearful retribution will be the ultimate result.

I would, therefore, call attention to Kazi Shahabudin's evidence before the Indian Finance Committee, abstracted in page 666 of the last issue of your paper. "He would prefer to postpone education and social improvement for a time, rather than that the Government should commit a breach of faith by imposing an additional cess upon a final and definitive settlement."

But the question that I would put before the English public is this: if, as a despotic Government, we be unable to increase taxation, cannot we, as a constitutional Government, facilitate the collection of rates for local purposes?

We have hitherto failed in our system of local taxation because, first, the revenue has been raised in an arbitrary way; second, the receipts have been expended in an objectionable way.

Let Local Boards of natives be elected, not subject to the dictation of zealous collectors, anxious to make a name for themselves. Let the proceedings of the Local Boards be published in vernacular newspapers for the criticism of ratepayers as in this country.

It may be argued that adequate revenue will not be voted, and that the receipts will be squandered in jobbery.

I hope hereafter to convince your readers that under the influence of genuine public opinion a sufficient revenue will be forthcoming, and jobbery and misappropriation of assets will be checked.—Your obedient servant, T.

Notices of Books.

The Nile without a Dragoman. By Frederic Eden. King and Co. 1871.

A New Sea and an Old Land. By W. G. Hamley. Blackwood and Sons. 1871.

We have put these two books together, because both alike treat of things Egyptian, and both give some account of what the writers themselves saw in their Egyptian wanderings. But there the likeness between them stops, having indeed got little further than Fluellen's famous parallel between Macedon and Monmouth, with "salmons in both" their respective streams. Colonel Hamley and Mr. Eden both relate their own experiences; but Mr. Eden's book is wholly taken up with such relation, whereas half of Colonel Hamley's deals with the historical past of the country and people he went to see. In point of style moreover there is a marked difference between the two. Colonel Hamley delights in the laboured smartness of a magazine-writer, who sets himself to catch the popular interest with certain tricks of phrase and funny references to well-worn topics of the day. He cuts as it were a few literary capers every now and then, just to place his audience on a sympathetic level with himself, and so lure them into swallowing the distilled essence of his own lately acquired knowledge. Mr. Eden on the other hand records with an easy, quiet grace the impressions left on his mind by each passing scene and incident. He has no "Bales of Manchester" to apostrophise in funnily familiar phrases; but his keen if unobtrusive sense of humour plays sunnily over the face of his narrative. In following his lead, we are never caught out of the Scylla of mere dulness to be engulfed in a Charybdis of boisterously smart talk. Neither book can be called dull reading, but Mr. Eden's liveliness has the charm of that easy natural movement which proclaims the artist of the higher sort. Colonel Hamley's obtrusively high spirits are much more likely to bore the average reader than Mr. Eden's quietly telling way of describing what he sees and hears. The contrast between their respective styles is very much like the contrast between a rapid railway ride, with all the stir and rush of life at the stations on the way, and the placid swaying of a "Dahabeeah" up the Nile, undisturbed by aught more eventful than a difference of opinion with the crew, or a narrow escape from shipwreck among the rocks between or over which the cataract tears its headlong course.

Mr. Eden's book is just the kind of volume which might be expected from a well-informed, good-humoured, finely-witted invalid, with few marks about it of an invalid's petulance, and many tokens of a playful yet delicate faculty for showing up the comical side of things. The author's main object is to show how easily a voyage up the Nile can be made without a dragoman, and to a certain extent that object seems to have been fairly attained, at a considerable saving in money and a proportionate outlay of patience and determination. Instead of an expensive dragoman at £2 a head daily, Mr. Eden and his wife hired the cheaper services of an Egyptian valet who could speak a few words of Italian and deliver or misdeliver his master's orders to the captain of the boat. Ibrahim proved hardly worth his salt, except as an amusing study for Mr. Eden's humourous pen. The voyage up the river is described in humourous detail; the conduct of the servants and crew, their wiles and roundabout ways of getting what they wanted, affording the author a fair opening for much quiet satire, relieved by pleasant passages of scenic description and shrewd personal portraiture. He has refrained from troubling the reader with anything like a hash of "Murray;" but people who want amusement and those who seek instruction touching the practical details of a voyage up the Nile will equally rejoice at his forbearance.

Colonel Hamley, on the other hand, claims attention rather for the skill with which he has dressed up a mass of useful knowledge gathered from the stores of well known Egyptologists, than for his somewhat slangy sketches of travel and adventure connected with the opening of the Suez Canal. It is no small merit to have produced so many readable chapters on the ancient history and social life of Egypt. In these he drops the part of a rollicking showman, and becomes a lecturer who can win without pandering to the popular taste. Even here indeed there are traces of that superficial cramming with which popular lecturers are prone to satisfy themselves; but it may on the whole be said that this part of his book is well and skilfully done. Those at any rate who come to the reading of it with knowledge as vague and slight as that to which he owned on first taking up the subject of Egyptian history, will not be disappointed with the fare thus offered them.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

MODERN OFFICIALISM.

The Bombay Gazette remarks that there used to be many Anglo-Indians who had a high idea of England's mission in this country, who tried to deal not only justly, but generously, with the people, and whose ambition it was "to sow some generous seed, fruitful of further thought and deed," in the country of their adoption. Now, such men are as rare as the open-handed civilians of the old time, who spent their money as freely as they received it. Your Anglo-Indian of the new school seems to have got a spice of the Marwarree in his blood. He prudently saves every half-penny of his own money to carry it away to England, and he is as grasping and avaricious in calculating how much the State can screw out of the people, as if tax-collecting were the sole raison d'etre of the English Government in India. He concentrates all his energy and intellect in the preparation of reports, the general tendency of which is to show that the revenues may be increased a lac of rupees a-year, if a new department be created costing ten lacs of rupees a-year, with himself at the head of it on a preposterously large salary. So reports are piled upon reports, and resolutions on resolutions; departments are multiplied till the growth of expenditure far exceeds the growth of revenue; and business, instead of becoming more simple, is complicated with so many entanglements that progress is impossible. These reports and departments are destroying the very life of the country. The multitude of counsellors darkens wisdom; and not a gleam of statesmanship ever pierces the thick gloom.

GARRISON DUTIES OF THE MADRAS ARMY.

The Madras Times holds that Madras has far more than her share of disagreeable and expensive stations, and as far as native troops are concerned, she is placed upon the roster for all foreign service, Aden excepted, a foreign station which falls to Bombay. This fact may be considered complimentary to the efficiency of the Madras troops, but we doubt not that they would very willingly resign the honour thrust upon them, for foreign service is exceedingly distasteful to the sepoys, as we all know, though the Madrassees, it must be confessed, bear their burden with a laudable resignation. Hong Kong, the Straits, and Burmah demand their services periodically, and take them away from their wives and families for years at a time, but stations beyond the black water are not their only annoyances; there is a foreign service found for them within the limits of Hindostan, and that service is employment in the Bengal Presidency. This burden is excessive, and we consider it might be very properly reduced in common justice to the Madras army. A glance at the map of India will show any one that if we are to continue to maintain three separate armies in India, Saugor, Dorunda and Banda should geographically and naturally be garrisoned with Bengal troops. Jubbulpore and Kamptee will also be clearly seen to belong to Bombay, while Belgaum, a long way to the southward, seems fairly the property of Madras. Great expense in periodical movements of troops, and much hardship to the Madras sepoys as well, would, we think, be saved, should the Government of India remap the military limits of the three Presidencies, and accord to the troops of each the stations most conveniently near to their separate head-quarters. As regards the foreign service beyond the sea, we have long been at a loss to understand why this burden should be especially saddled upon the shoulders of Madras native troops? Is there any good reason why the native soldiers of Bengal and Bombay should not take their fair share of this disagreeable service? Since the mutiny, Bengal sepoys, we believe, have been enlisted for service in any part of the world, but apparently owing to some gross favouritism, for which it is difficult to account, the Bengal sepoys are never sent upon foreign service unless war and a prospect of plenty of loot makes such service agreeable to them. Fair weather soldiers, they somehow or other manage to escape the hard lot which falls to their comrades of Madras, who, periodically torn from their wives and families to cross the kala-panee, have yet still further to expect foreign service in Bengal whenever occasion requires their presence in that Presidency. This is hard. It seems to us only just that the Bengal native regiments should take their share of Burman and China service in time of peace, as well as in war, and so in some sort relieve the Madras troops of a duty which we are well aware bears very heavily upon them. There can be no more difficulty, we should imagine, in sending native regiments to Burmah from Calcutta than Madras, and we might suppose that the Bengalees would lose nothing in efficiency from an occasional tour of foreign service; rather the reverse. Their escape hitherto from this especial duty can have only the effect of pampering their conceit and prejudices, and we doubt not that a little "roughing" would do them all the good in the world.

THE VICEREGAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

The Council met at Simla on Tuesday, the 6th June, when there were present his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, K.P., G.M.S.I., presiding, his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., the Hon. Sir Richard Temple, K.C.S.I., the Hon. J. Fitzjames Stephen, Q.C., the Hon. B. H. Ellis, Major-General the Hon. H. W. Norman, C.B., the Hon. F. R. Cockerell.

CHAUKIDARI ACT EXTENSION BILL.

The Hon. Mr. Stephen moved that the Hon. Mr. Strachey be added to the select committee on the Bill to authorise the extension of the Chaukidari Act (XX. of 1856) to places where there is no jemadar of police.

The motion was put and agreed to.

LAND IMPROVEMENT BILL.

The Hon. Mr. Stephen moved, with the permission of the President, on behalf of the Hon. Mr. Strachey, that his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab be added to the select committee on the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to advances of money by the Government for the improvement of land.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Council adjourned to Tuesday, the 13th June, 1871.

Miscellaneous.

CIVIL.—Mr. C. T. Buckland, commissioner of the Burdwan division, has been appointed to a seat in the Bengal Council. Mr. G. CAMPBELL, the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal, it is said, contemplates starting on a visit to Assam and Cachar by the end of this month.

CHOLERA AT CAWNPORE.—We regret to learn that cholera has made its appearance at Cawnpore among the native population, and that a few have fallen victims to it.

MEDICAL.—A letter from Peshawur mentions that the whole of the medical subordinates of H. M.'s 1-6th Foot were placed in arrest the other day for submitting an application to their superior medical officer for transfer.

MILITARY.—The Pioneer has reason for believing that on Major-General Brook Taylor's promotion to Lieutenant-General (which has already taken place by death vacancies at home), he will not vacate the Oudh command as was expected, but a certain Warrant of 1870 will be made applicable to this country, and thus permit him to retain his division for a year from the date of such promotion, as is usual in similar cases out of India. To this little or no exception can be made. General Brook Traylor has not yet taken his privilege leave, nor has his temporary successor as yet transpired.

TRADE OF BENGAL.—The Calcutta Commercial Guide for May shows a dull state of trade as compared with the corresponding month in 1870. The imports of merchandise show a decrease of Rs. 55,64,199. Piece goods alone show a falling off of nearly seventeen lacs of rupees. In exports, merchandise shows a decrease of Rs. 514,233, and specie of Rs. 784,448. The chief decrease is under the heads of indigo, saltpetre, rice, cloth, mustard, and poppyseed. The decrease in collections on goods imported and exported was Rs. 255,506, but there was an increase in the salt collections of Rs. 390,709. In the import tonnage there was a decrease of 217 ships and 31,861 tons, and export tonnage an increase of twelve ships, and 19,870 tons.

AJMERE COLLEGE.—The following amounts have been subscribed by the different Chiefs of Rajpootana in order to found an endowment for the College to be established at Ajmere for the purpose of educating the young nobles of Rajpootana:—Oodeypore, Rs. 1,00,000; Kerowlee, 15,000; Jeypore, 1,25,000; Kishengurh, 6,000; Serohi, 5,000. The council of management at Ulwar offered Rs. 35,000, but considering that the disordered finances of that State do not as yet allow any alienation of revenue, the offer has been declined for the present. The Maharajah of Bikaneer also offered a lakh, and the Nawab of Tonk Rs. 25,000; but in view of the indebtedness of those States, the Viceroy, while cordially thanking the Chiefs for their liberal offers, has considered that their contributions should be limited to 50,000 and 5,000 respectively.

DARJEELING TEA ENTERPRISE.—The Commissioner of Cooch Behar has written an encouraging report of the Darjeeling tea enterprise. Last year, he says, was generally favourable to the tea planters, who are now pushing their cultivation into the Terai. The introduction of machinery, coupled with good weather, should this year do much to restore this branch of agricultural industry to public confidence. "It is," he continues, "almost certain that there would be a considerable demand for Darjeeling tea out of India but for the protective policy of Thibet in favour of China, which prohibits its importation. The tea cultivation on the frontier may yet necessitate a railway." This railway, we believe, has been already sanctioned, and the prohibitive policy of the Thibetan authorities has more than once within the last few months engaged the attention of Government.—Pioneer.

AMUSING APPLICATIONS TO COURTS.—Judging from the reports made to the Deputy Commissioner by the police officers, says the Indian Daily News, some of the most strange and extraordinary complaints are made by people at the thannahs. The proprietor of a boarding house complains that one of his lodgers had cheated him, by inducing him to provide him (the lodger) with the necessaries of life on the promise that payment for the same would be made at the end of the month. A lady seeks the advice of the police as to what she is to do to cure her husband of the habit of coming home late at nights. A native female asks for the intervention of the police, so that her husband might be prevented from leaving the house after he had returned from his work. One gentleman complains about the boys in the next house whistling, and thus disturbing him while at prayers. A native reports the loss of his child, nineteen years of age, and the police very good-naturedly bring home the prodigal son.

HORRIBLE GUN ACCIDENT.—A horrible accident has occurred at Cawnpore. Four Europeans had gone out on the 11th June some five miles from the station for a day's shooting, and were about to start on their return. One of them, Dignum, a brother of the jockey of that name, had pushed his gun, butt-end foremost, into the dog-cart from behind, when one of the party observed that he had better discharge it before they started. Upon this he took hold of the gun by the barrels, and was drawing it out of the cart, when it went off, the contents shattering his arm all to pieces; in fact, blowing it in a great part away, and then lodging in the side of a man named Cook, who was standing behind him. They were brought in without delay to Cawnpore, but Dignum expired immediately on his arrival from sheer loss of blood, no one apparently having thought of applying a tourniquet to the arm. The other poor fellow's case was also manifestly hopeless, as he was shot through the liver and stomach; he lingered till the following day, when he too expired. Dignum had just obtained a situation on the Oude and Rohilcund Railway, which he was proceeding to join. Cook, we believe, was a jockey.—Pioneer, June 14.

FLOODS IN ORISSA.—The natives in Calcutta have it that there have been great inundations in Orissa, especially in the Balasore district, and that the destruction of the rice crop has been nearly complete.

NERBUDDA COAL.—Major Bonus, R.E., has expressed a favourable opinion of the Nerbudda coal. In an experiment made with it in January last 3½ tons carried a train weighing 439 tons 19½ miles within the hour.

MARRIED BY AUCTION.—The Grambarta Prakashika relates a curious case of marriage, which is too good to be lost. A Brahmin residing in a village lying close to Burdwan, unable to find a proper match for his daughter, or too indolent to find out a bridegroom himself, determined to sell his daughter by auction. A day was fixed, and several suitors came in at once. After a hot bidding for some hours, two of the Brahmins found that they could bid no higher, and the father of the bride thought he had gained enough by the marriage, and fixed upon one of the Brahmins as his would-be son-in-law. The day of marriage came, however, when lo! the two Brahmins were found at loggerheads with each other, each struggling to have the girl to himself. The father was equal to the occasion, and his ingenuity was immediately displayed in the proposal for another bidding. The contest now became excessively hot, when the richer of the two of course prevailed, and the whole bargain was concluded by his offering to the father a sum of Rs. 450. The girl soon became his.

A DARING DACOITY.—A Benares correspondent of the Lucknow Times, writing on the 2nd June, says:—"A few days ago a dacoity had been committed in a village near Cholapore, some twelve miles distant from this city, accompanied with all the cruelties told of these men. Such practices have been unheard for many years in this part, so energetic measures must be soon adopted to put an end to this at once. This band of dacoits went with all the show of a marriage procession, with drums beating; but had weapons concealed in palanquins. When they reached their place of destination at night, they armed themselves, lighted torches, and surrounded the house of the zemindar of the village, who was quite unprepared to meet the danger, and perfectly unaware of their approach, often firing a gun to warn the villagers to remain within doors. They plundered to the amount of some three or four thousand rupees in cash and in ornaments, severely wounding all those who made any show of resistance. Strict inquiries are being made by the police, but no clue has yet been traced."

INDIA ENCOURAGED TO BE GRATEFUL.—India is on the point of being regenerated. There can be no doubt about it, for the "Association in Aid of Social Progress in India" has sent out to Calcutta a large box of "educational apparatus;" and another box has been sent out from Bristol filled with ladies' work and toys as presents for native ladies and children. Similar boxes are being sent to Bombay and Kurrachee. They contain "maps, diagrams, and boxes of lessons on objects, and other educational apparatus, procured from the depository of the British and Foreign School Society and from James Reynold, 174, Strand, whose beautiful illustrated diagrams and pictures are little known in India, but are highly appreciated where they have been introduced." They contain also illustrated magazines, such as the "Animals' Friend," the "British Workman," the "Band of Hope," the "Children's Friend," and the "Infant's Magazine." A number of old copies of the Illustrated London News and Graphic have also, our readers will be glad to learn, been despatched to the address of native gentlemen in Calcutta and other Indian cities. Now we are of opinion that reciprocity is everything. If England sends us toys, it is only decent and proper that we should do something of the same sort in return. Impressed with the importance of this consideration, a number of native and English gentlemen, residing in Bengal, have formed themselves into an association under the title of the "British Pauper's Elevation in the Scale of Humanity Company, Limited." In pursuance of the aim with which the society was founded, a large collection is being made of "recreation apparatus," or, as they are sometimes called, "khelonas." Tarquin's toys from Benares and Patna, and ivory letters from Berhampore have already arrived in large quantities. Pellet bows and kites are soon expected. Supplies have been promised of skip-jacks, and the big flat seeds with which Burmese boys so successfully amuse themselves. An order has been given for a large quantity of pachisi boards, and it is in contemplation to engage and despatch to England a man or girl, capable of teaching the use of the Madrasse horse or one-legged stilt. It has been rightly said that pauperism, involving as it does the degradation of a large part of the population of England, is the greatest blot in our civilisation; and it is therefore the more delightful to see that earnest and energetic men in this distant land have put their shoulder to the wheel, and are determined to destroy the monster evil.—Indian Observer.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, June 17.—The past few days have witnessed a decided improvement in this market, and a fair business is being done in staple articles at advancing rates. In Grey Shirtings the improvement has been most manifest; 7 and 8¼ lbs. goods have been more run upon than the other weights, and the prices of these are already about two annas up. Grey Jacconets: Low to medium makes of 39-inch have been more saleable, and have an upward tendency. Grey Madapollams and T-Cloths continue very quiet. Grey Mulls have undergone no change. For White Jacconets a fair business has been done in low to me lium qualities, without change in rates. Other descriptions of Bleached Goods are without change. Grey Twist: A fair business has been done in all spinnings at firmer rates. Coloured Twist: Turkey Red is very depressed. Pea Green and Orange are saleable at quotations. Other colours are very quiet.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, June 17.—Saltpetre: There has been a steady demand, and prices remain firm at last week's quotations; the stock in the market is about 4,300 bags. Rice: There has been less demand for all descriptions, and prices have slightly given way; good white Rs. 3-5 to 3-7, and middling Rs. 2-10 to 2-13. Linseed: There has been considerable activity in the market, and prices have somewhat risen; a full, however, is looked for shortly, as the rising of the rivers will bring larger supplies to market. Rapeseed has been a less demand, and prices have given way all round. Raw Silk: At a public sale held during the week 46 bales of Commercolly, November bund, sold for Rs. 15 per seer, 20 bales of Soorsah, July, 1870, for Rs. 17, and 4 bales, unmarked, at Rs. 12. The other transactions have amounted to only 97 bales at rates from Rs. 21-10 for Gonatea and Rangamaty, to Rs. 14 for Commercolly March bund. Corahs: Holders still stand out for extreme prices, and, in consequence, little or no business has been done; the stock consists of about 10,000 pieces.

THE MANDALAY AGENCY.—Captain Strover, we are told, received charge of the Political Agency at Mandalay from Major MacMahon on the 14th March last, and on the following day had an interview with the King, whose manner was, as usual of late, most affable and friendly. He concluded by begging Captain Strover always to come direct to him in case of any difference with the Ministers, and to use his best endeavours to preserve friendship between the two Governments.

WYNAAD.—The heavy rains in Wynaad are said to have destroyed a considerable part of the first blossoms on the coffee trees. The monsoon set in in Wynaad more than a couple of weeks ago.

THE MUTINEERS OF THE 19TH N.I.—The Madras Athenæum of Friday, June 16, hears that up to that time his Excellency the Commander-in Chief had not reported upon the petitions of the men of No. 1 company of the 19th M.N.I., who applied to be reinstated. It is believed that Lieutenant-General Haines is waiting to see if any more petitions will be presented to him before submitting his report to Government.

CAPTAIN ATKINSON.—Captain S. E. Atkinson, late adjutant of the 19th Regiment Madras Native Infantry, who was deprived of his command owing to the late mutinous conduct of the men of No. 1 company of that corps, has, the Madras Athenæum says, petitioned Government to be appointed to the 29th Regiment Madras Native Infantry. He has submitted a certificate from Colonel Cholmeley, late commandant of the 19th, bearing testimony to the valuable assistance rendered by the petitioner as adjutant of the regiment, in which capacity he was said to have kept his commanding officer always informed of what was taking place in the corps.

MILITARY.—A week or ten days ago a court-martial was ordered to assemble in the Fort for the trial of Lieut. Frances Beresford, of the 1-5th Brigade of Royal Artillery, stationed at the Mount, on a charge, as was generally rumoured, of disobedience of orders. Subsequently the order for the court-martial was cancelled, and we are now informed that Lieutenant Beresford has sent in his papers to the Commander-in-Chief and resigned his commission. The resignation has been forwarded by the Commander-in-Chief to Lord Napier of Magdala, who, in reply thereto, has telegraphed to Madras that the same is accepted.—Athenæum, June 18.

COAL IN HYDERABAD.—A native of Hyderabad lately forwarded to the Collector of the Kistna District some specimens of coal, and Mr. Boswell is of opinion that they are genuine. The native said that he found it in the Nizam's territories, about 112 miles from Juggiapettah, the place where Colonel Applegath says that coal can be found. Venkiah, for that is the name of the discoverer, wants Rs. 2,000 for his discovery. The specimen of coal received from the Collector of the Kistna District is to be sent to Colonel Applegath, and if it is genuine, the fact will be communicated to the Resident of Hyderabad, who has received instructions from the Madras Government by telegraph on the subejct.—Madras Standard.

MUNICIPAL ADMINISTRATION.—A petition has been forwarded to Government signed by about five thousand ratepayers of Bombay, complaining of the excessive cost of municipal administration in Bombay.

DISCOVERY OF COAL.—Coal mines have been discovered at Condeconda, in the Nizam's dominions. The officer, who took much pains in the search, has been promoted in the service and presented with the sum of Rs. 2,000 by Sir Salar Jung.

FUND FOR THE PERSIAN PARSEES.—We see that nearly Rs. 25,000 have been subscribed to the fund for the Persian Parsees. We learn that Mr. Dinshaw Manockjee Petit has transmitted Rs. 2,200 to Persia for the relief of the Parsees there. The Parsee sharebrokers of Bombay have raised subscriptions among themselves for the relief of their suffering co-religionists in Persia, and have handed a sum of Rs. 202 to Messrs. Godrez Mehrwan to be sent to Persia.

GRAND DURBAR AT POONA.—We understand that a grand Durbar will be held by his Excellency the Governor some time in September next, on which occasion all the Chieftains of the Southern Mahratta Country, as well as the Sirdars of the Deccan, and other persons of note will be invited. At this Durbar his Excellency the Governor will commemorate the ceremony of presenting those gentlemen with the order of the C.S.I., which her Most Gracious Majesty the Empress of India has bestowed on them. We believe this will be the last Durbar which his Excellency the Governor will hold in the capital of the Deccan.—Poona Observer.

THE S. S. "COLLINGWOOD."—There was a rumour afloat on Friday and Saturday that the s. s. Collingwood had been drifted down to the Zanzibar Coast by the cyclone which happened in the beginning of May; but nothing has been heard of the vessel, and nautical men attach little importance to the rumour, thinking it very unlikely that she could have drifted to the region of Zanzibar.—Times of India, June 20.

STATUE OF THE QUEEN.—We learn that in accordance with a wish expressed by his Excellency the Governor the ceremony of unveiling the statue of her Majesty the Queen, a gift to the city of Bombay from the late Gaekwar, has been postponed until the beginning of next year. The work of putting up the ornamental marble cupola under which the statue is to be placed has been completed, and a stone pavement is now being made, with a low parapet wall around it for an iron railing.—Bombay Gazette.

DOUBLE MURDER AT POONA.—We learn by telegram from Poona that a double murder took place in the lines of H.M.'s 83rd Regiment on Sunday night. A soldier named Patrick Smith, without any known motive, shot other two men named Evans Roberts and Carroll with a revolver. Roberts was shot dead, and it was believed that Carroll was mortally wounded. Smith had hitherto borne an excellent character in the regiment, and is supposed to be now insane.—Bombay Gazette.

QUICK DESPATCH.—The days of quick passages are not yet over, nor has the race of fine old skippers yet become extinct. A proof of this is found in the ship Conflict, commanded by Captain Symons. The Conflict sailed from the Downs on February 28, for Bombay, with a full cargo of general merchandise. She arrived in Bombay on May 15, after a voyage of seventy-seven days. The cargo was discharged with every possible despatch, and re-loading commenced. On the 15th inst. the Conflict sailed for Havre, with a cargo of 1,600 tons of cotton, within 108 days of her leaving England. This is good work.

A PARSEE REFUSES TO TAKE AN OATH.—In a late case Mr. Sorabshaw Dadabhoy, a prosecutor, on being asked to take his oath on the Zend Avesta, refused to do so, and expressed his belief that the Zend Avesta was not directly received from the Almighty. Thereupon the Court requested him to name the religion he was supposed to accept, when he answered that he had no belief in any of the known religions, but accepted the doctrines of Deism; that is, he adored only the Almighty. After some discussion, the Court, in his case, dispensed with the Zend Avesta, and warning the witness to say the truth, proceeded to examine him.

A FEMININE MOVEMENT.—We are glad to learn from a native contemporary that a female association has been set on foot at Poona by some energetic and enlightened Marathi ladies. This association is named "The Reform Ladies' Association of Poona." Any lady wishing to be a member must not be under eighteen years of age, and she is required to have a tolerable knowledge of reading and writing; her husnand's, or guardian's consent is also necessary. The association is to be conducted by a president, vice-president, secretaries, and treasurers to be elected by the members. Any member not wishing her name to be made public will be allowed to do so. The purposes this association contemplate are to superintend native female schools in the town, and to offer suggestions for their conduct and improvement; new schools to be opened where found necessary; arrangements also to be made for imparting private instruction to those who may have the inclination to learn, but are prevented by social difficulties or caste prejudices. The association most laudably undertakes to support destitute females who may be unable, on account of physical infirmities, to support themselves. Religious controversies are prohibited.—Times of India.

DEATH OF DR. MILES, R.A.—We regret to announce the death of Dr. H. Chalmers Miles, of the 6th Brigade Royal Artillery, who died at Colaba on the afternoon of the 16th June, of abscess of the liver. The deceased, who was only thirty-eight, had been eighteen years in the service, and during that time had served through several campaigns. His date of commission as assistant-surgeon was 1854; and he joined the Royal Artillery in the following year and proceeded to the Crimea. On the 9th November, 1867, he was made surgeon and appointed to the staff; at the latter end of 1868 he rejoined the Artillery in exchange. Previous to this, namely, in 1862 and 1863, he served in Canada in the 10th Brigade Royal Artillery. He was also at Kurrachee with the 83rd Foot. The following is the official statement of his services:—"Surgeon Miles served on the Medical Staff during the Crimean War in 1855 (medal and clasp, and Turkish medal). Served with the 83rd Regiment in the Indian campaign of 1857-58; was present at the attack on Nimbkeira (severely wounded); during the defence of the fortified square of Neemuch, in November, 1857, although suffering from a gunshot wound, served in medical charge of the detachment 83rd regiment and wing of 12th Native Infantry; was present during the field operations against Awah, and subsequent destruction of adjacent strongholds; served in medical charge of 83rd regiment prior to, and was present during, the siege operations against Kotah and its capture by assault (medal and clasp)." The funeral took place at Sewree Cemetery at five o'clock on Saturday evening, and was attended by the Royal Artillery and many officers of the 49th and 19th regiments, besides private friends. The deceased was, of course, interred with military honours.—Times of India, June 20.

COTTON CULTIVATION IN SIND.—A statement of cotton cultivation in the province of Sind in the year 1870-71, contrasted with the extent in the previous year, shows a net increase of 2,168 acres twenty-five guntas in native, and a decrease of twenty-nine acres twelve guntas in foreign cotton. There was a considerable increase in the Hyderabad collectorate—37,780 acres, against 32,228. In the Thurr and Parkur districts the acreage was 58,584, against 56,445. In the other parts of the province there was a decrease in cultivation, the total figures being, for Kurrachee collectorate, 1,489, against 4,573; Shikarpoor collectorate, 16,080, against 16,133; Frontier, Upper Sind, 1,580, against 1,978. The prospects of the season's crop appear from the following figures (the statement is dated Kurrachee, May 2):—Kurrachee collectorate, raw cotton 2,994 maunds, cleaned cotton 937 maunds; Hyderabad collectorate, raw 273,466 maunds, cleaned 85,473; Shikarpoor collectorate, raw 8,879, cleaned 2,314; Frontier, Upper Sind, raw 4,700, cleaned 1,664; Thurr and Parkur Districts, raw 292,090, cleaned 92,629.

DEATH OF AN OLD SOLDIER.—With extreme regret we have to announce the death of Lieutenant Morgan, a partner in the well-known firm of Morgan and Balcrishna, which sad event took place at his residence, near St. Mary's Church, yesterday morning, after a short but painful illness. The deceased arrived in India, as a private soldier, in the month of May, 1831, and served twenty-nine years in the Bombay Artillery, and gradually rose to the rank of Lieutenant, and retired from the Army in the year 1861, on a pension of 6s. 6d. per diem, and a yearly allowance of £50 for meritorious services. Lieutenant Morgan was at the actions of Cabul, Afghanistan, and Khujuck in 1838; and the following complimentary order was issued on his promotion to the rank of Lieutenant:—"A. R. O. No. 132,—29th May, 1859. It gives the Commandant of Artillery much satisfaction to call attention to G. G. O. No. 399, dated 5th instant, which announces that her Majesty has been pleased to confer a commission of Lieutenant on Ridingmaster Edward Morgan, in consideration of his long course of active and meritorious services especially in the field. During a service of nearly twenty-nine years Mr. Morgan has been conspicuous for unflagging energy and earnest anxiety in the performance of his duties, both in the field and in quarters, and a character for subordination and honesty of purpose which could not fail to meet with this reward. In congratulating Mr. Morgan on the distinction conferred upon him, the Commandant would point to him as a bright example to every soldier in the corps." Mr. Morgan was well known in Poona for his uprightness and integrity of character, and his death is regretted by all who knew him. His remains will be interred this morning at seven o'clock in the Protestant cemetery, accompanied by a carrying party of the Royal Artillery from Kirkee.—Poonah Observer, June 17.

THE LATE COLONEL R. P. WARDEN.—It is well known with what bitter animosity the late Colonel R. P. Warden, director of the Transport Train in Abyssinia, was pursued from the time of his return to Poonah till his death, by Major Chitty, military accountant, and some others who, unfortunately, happened then to be advisers of the Bombay Government. The misfortune, be it understood, was chiefly that of the Bombay Government itself, which can never regard but with shame and regret the unmanly and unjust course it was persuaded to pursue with regard to Colonel Warden, one of the most sensitively honourable officers by whom any Government was ever served. The Bombay Government, prompted by Major Chitty, who was ably supported by Colonel Holland and Colonel Marriott, badgered Colonel Warden to such an extent regarding vouchers and accounts which it was simply unreasonable to expect him to produce in the form that prevails in the non-combatant account department of Poonah, that he found no rest from them but in the Poonah churchyard. In February, 1869, the Bombay Government passed a resolution, the language of which could only be taken as reflecting seriously on Colonel Warden's honour as an officer and a gentleman. Regarding this resolution, Lord Napier of Magdala, then Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army, wrote:—"Had Colonel Warden survived, the Commander-in-Chief is convinced from his observation of Colonel Warden's high sense of honour that he would have applied for a court-martial to clear himself from the serious charges conveyed in the several proceedings and resolutions." But as Colonel Warden had been, as some think, hounded to death, he could not make any such application; so his brother, the honourable Mr. Justice Warden, and his Excellency Lord Napier of Magdala, applied for a court of enquiry into the deceased officer's accounts and conduct. Of course this was denied. Mr. Justice Warden, therefore, addressed a memorial to the Secretary of State for India, representing the ill-treatment and injustice to which his brother had been subjected, and praying that the stain which it was sought to fasten on his memory might be removed. And it has been removed; and those who were the authors thereof have got the reproof they deserved. His Grace the Duke of Argyll has written as follows:—"Her Majesty's Government are satisfied that the late Colonel R. P. Warden discharged his duties as director of the Transport Train with the Abyssinian Expedition with zeal and integrity." Any other conclusion could never even have been hinted at except in certain official cliques of the Bombay Presidency. The full history of the case we may give by-and-by.—Times of India.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, June 20.—The business done during the week has been very small; prices, however, are well maintained, owing to the smallness of stocks generally, and first holders are firm. Grey Goods have been less active; prices, however, are firm, except for Maddapollams and Jacconets, which appear to be somewhat weaker. Printers dull; 2¾ lbs., Rs. 2-1¾. Long Cloths and Domestics neglected, and no sales. Jacconets are inquired for. Dhoties continue dull. Bleached Goods show no change in prices, but more business has been done. Dyed and Printed Goods continue very quiet, and no business of any consequence has been done. Turkey Red Goods are very dull, without, however, any change in prices. Yarns: The business done in all descriptions has again been very limited, on account of the first holders, and prices generally show no change. Metals: All descriptions, except Iron, are firm.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, June 30—Cotton: Yesterday morning telegrams, dated 17th, were circulated, reporting that the Agricultural Department at Washington announce that the area of ground cultivated with cotton this year shows a diminution of 1 1-3rd million of acres, and that the crop will be 34 millions of bales only. On receipt of this news, there was considerable excitement in our Cotton Market, and Bhownuggur was purchased as high as Rs. 215 per candy, equal, with all charges, to about 7¾d. realised in Liverpool. But the business done was not large, nor has there been much done during the week, the prices here being too high when compared with those at home. The total transactions of the week, for export, amount to about 14,000 bales only, of which the following were the principal, viz., 5,000 bales of Dhollera and Bhownuggur, at Rs. 198 to 210 per candy; 1,400 bales of Veerungaum, at Rs. 201 to 205 per candy; 500 bales of Akote, at Rs. 206 to 207; 1,200 bales of Barsee, at Rs. 203 to 206; and 700 bales of Dharwar Sawginned, at Rs. 206 to 212. The Market closes firm.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

PASSAGES—STAFF CORPS.

Letter from the Government of India, Military Department, to the Quartermaster-General, dated 4th May, 1871, in continuation of G. O. No. 201 of 1870:—

"In reply to your letter dated 2nd May, 1871, I am directed to acquaint you that the Governor-General in Council is pleased to authorise the grant of a passage at the Government expense to the port of embarkation for officers provided with free passage to England under the provisions of this department letter of 28th June, 1870, to Government of Bombay.

"During the troop ship season such officers will be required to proceed to Bombay, but at other times of the year they will be obliged to embark at the port nearest to their station."

FREE PASSAGE TO PROBATIONERS OF THE STAFF CORPS.

The Government of India have authorised the grant of a free passage to England to a probationer for the Staff Corps from a British Regiment permitted to remain behind when his regiment embarks on relief or otherwise, who may fail to pass the final examination in the prescribed tests; the passage should be provided in a troop-ship if one be available, otherwise the actual cost, and no more, should be paid to the owner or agents of the vessel conveying him to England.

That authority has also sanctioned the grant to such officers of a passage at the public expense to the port of embarkation, stating that during the troop-ship season they should be required to proceed to Bombay, but at all other times of the year they will be obliged to embark at the port nearest to their station.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The Parliamentary Committee sitting on the finance arrangements of the Indian Government resumed it sittings on Friday, the 7th inst.; Mr. Grant Duff officiating in the chair until the arrival, in the afternoon, of Mr. Ayrton.

Mr. J. C. Geddes, who stated that he was sent to Orissa in 1866 with the power of a deputy-collector and magistrate to distribute the relief funds, was under examination the whole of the day. Being presented to the committee by Professor Fawcett, he was examined in chief by that hon. member, and gave utterance to a vast number of views and theories, many of which were crotchety and paradoxical. Asked what was the chief or primary cause of the Orissa famine, he replied that "the only antecedent that could have been varied was the weight of Government taxation." To the excessive burden of the taxes it was mainly due that the produce of the province had to be exported in order to procure means to discharge the Government claims; and that it came to pass that in a bad season there were no reserves of grain in hand to supplement the deficient harvest. The Orissa Irrigation Works, though certain never to pay a farthing dividend on the capital expended upon them, would undoubtedly be of great advantage to that province if the future expenditure be borne by the Imperial Treasury. Famines, according to the witness, are on the increase under British rule, owing to the greater facilities afforded for exporting the surplus produce of each year. The description of the great famine of 1770, given in Hunter's "Annals of Rural Bengal," is greatly exaggerated. The smallness of revenue remissions in the subsequent years disproves the statement that ten millions of people perished, and that one-third of the country was thrown out of cultivation. Except for military purposes, railways are of doubtful benefit to the people, and are constructed in such a costly manner that they can never be remunerative. The capital accounts are never closed, so that it is impossible to tell what was the real cost of any actual line. Then, the loss of revenue from the land thus appropriated was never taken into consideration. In Lower Bengal irrigation works had not been remunerative, but no reliable figures could be got at, for the accounts of land revenue and the irrigation-rate were usually thrown together. Witness considered that while the cost of British administration was increasing rapidly, the ability of the people of India to meet it was limited.

On the Excise question the witness considered there was no chance of improving revenue from the duty, as the people were hostile to it. He looked upon the revenue from a financial point of view, as a revenue that must ultimately break down. With the fall of those treaty rights with China which were threatened, the revenue would fall. As to the income-tax question, he considered that the incomes of the natives under taxation were habitually over-estimated, for the people of Orissa were so excessively impoverished that they could not bear taxation; so of India generally, he thought it was impossible to levy taxes satisfactorily.

After some evidence respecting the currency of India, the witness gave explanations touching the system on which the accounts of the Calcutta Government were kept, which he believed to be a bad system of keeping accounts.

The latter part of the witness's evidence was of too theoretical and unpractical a character to admit of being detailed here; suffice, that he thought British rule was under impending collapse altogether, for which Indian statesmen should prepare themselves. He quoted from a pamphlet he had written, to show what his views were on the subject.

The committee met on Tuesday, when Mr. Geddes was allowed an opportunity of reverting to portions of his evidence given on the previous Friday, and correcting the same. The corrections qualified certain opinions, and put some few facts in a new light. The examination-in-chief then continued, being with reference to the famines, and to ascertain how the witness could maintain that the British Government was accountable, to a certain extent, for the more recent famines in India, just as bad governments heretofore, from the days of Warren Hastings, were held accountable for the famines of 1770 and subsequent ones. Although witness asserted this, he did not appear to prove his case to the satisfaction of the committee in any way. The questions and answers on this point lasted a long time.

The examination continued on the effect of opium growth upon the cultivation of grain, &c. In reply to questions from Mr. Hermon, Mr. Eastwick, and Mr. Grant Duff, the witness held to the articles he had maintained, viz., that we ought to withdraw from the direct administration of Indian affairs, and maintain a form of Government under special subsidies, so as to prevent our losing large interests and claims we had created in India in the course of the whole career of our rule. The subsidies should be paid for out of British taxation imposed for the purpose.

The committee held their final sitting for the present session on Friday. Mr. T. Thornton contributed further evidence by way of explanation regarding the losses sustained by the Government in the purchase and sale of the Malta and Alexandria Cable, by which a loss of about £150,000 had been incurred. The loss, it was explained, was divided between the Home and Indian Governments. As to the curious charge of 9s. 6d. made by the Government line on local messages which might only be delivered a door off at Bombay, it appeared that though a message from London to India costs £4. 10s., for which the Indian Government delivers at Mooltan, Chittagong, Madras, &c., a message for Bombay costs the same sum; but the Government only receives £4. 0s. 6d., the Indo-European Company pocketing the balance of 9s. 6d., notwithstanding that messages in Bombay are delivered by the Government, and not by the Company. The Government have now claimed the 9s. 6d., but the Secretary of State hesitates to assent, in consequence of the Telegraph Company remonstrating. Mr. T. L. Seccombe was called and alternately examined with Mr. Thornton on the Indian Railway accounts. Explanations regarding the losses of the Government through taking over the Canning Railway were elicited from Mr. Thornton. It was at the recommendation of the late Lord Canning that the railway came into the hands of the Government.

Miscellaneous.

JUDICIAL APPOINTMENT. — The Queen has appointed Charles Gurdon Kemball, Esq., of the Bombay Civil Service, to be a Puisne Judge of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay.

BRITISH INDIAN EXTENSION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The report of the British Extension Telegraph Company recommends a dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum for the past half-year.

ORDER OF THE BATH.—The Queen has been pleased to give orders for the appointment of Lieutenant-Colonel Howard Crauford Elphinstone, C.B., C.M.G., V.C., of the Royal Engineers, late Governor to his Royal Highness the Prince Arthur, to be an Ordinary Member of the Civil Division of the Second Class or Knights Commanders of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath.

INDIAN RAILWAYS.—It is understood that the whole of the Debenture Stock lately offered by the East Indian and Great Indian Peninsula Railway Companies has been taken. The recent Act of Parliament authorising trust investments in this class of property has led to a considerable demand, and when the Debenture Stocks of these companies are compared with the 4 per Cent. Stock of the India Government, now at 102½, or about 101¼, less accrued dividend, a large margin for improvement seems apparent in the former, the security being virtually the same.

WILL OF THE LATE SIR HENRY DURAND.—The will of Major-General the Hon. Sir Henry Marion Durand, C.B., K.C.S.I., late Lieut.-Governor of the Punjab, was first proved on the 28th of January, 1871, at the High Court of Judicature of Fort William, in Bengal, by Joseph Farrer, M.D., C.S.I., one of the executors, and since proved in London on the 23rd ult. by the Most Noble Algernon George Duke of Northumberland, the other executor, the personalty in England being sworn under £9,000. The gallant General died on the 1st of January, this year, at Tonk, North-West Frontier of India, being killed by a fall from his elephant, and was in his fifty-ninth year. He had made his will in 1866, which is purely of a family nature. Among other bequests, he has left to his son Edward his father's sword, and his own sword, together with his medals and decorations, and to his son Henry he leaves his books and MSS.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MONDAY, July 10.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—The Duke of RICHMOND gave notice that on the second reading of the Army Regulation Bill he should move an amendment against proceeding further with the Bill until a complete and comprehensive scheme of military organisation should be laid before Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY, July 13.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—Lord NORTHBROOK, in moving the second reading of the Army Regulation Bill, first met the objection that the Bill did not contain the entire Government scheme. The only provisions, however, of the original Bill now omitted were those relative to the passing of soldiers from the active service to the reserve, the ballot for the Militia, and the clauses enabling counties to raise money to provide barracks for the Militia—all which matters might conveniently be postponed for future legislation.—Lord SANDHURST said that, after Lord Northbrook's statement, it could no longer be alleged that there was no scheme before the country or that it was incomplete even in its details. To reject a Bill, the principle of which had been affirmed by large majorities of the other House, and to refer it to a Royal Commission, would be almost without precedent. As an old commanding officer of a regiment, and afterwards a commander of armies, he bore testimony to the injurious operation of purchase in weakening the moral influence of commanders of regiments. There was no intention to interfere with the present system of retirement, and, taking Major Anson's figures to be correct, he calculated that the additional cost of the present Bill, instead of being £750,000 a-year, would not exceed £240,000 a-year. Inquiring what would be the effect of the rejection of the Bill, he impressively deprecated such an event in the interest of the army, and especially of the officers, and reminded their lordships that the Government scheme would be carried out not by the Bill alone, but would be rendered more complete by the Orders in Council and Army Warrants by which it must be supplemented.—Lord GREY having challenged a statement made by Lord SANDHURST, who rose to explain, a warm discussion ensued upon the point of order, in which Lord GRANVILLE took part.—Lord SANDHURST having at length been allowed to explain, Lord GREY proceeded warmly to oppose the scheme, and repeated at some length his views on Army Reorganisation.—After some remarks from the Duke of RICHMOND, Lord DALHOUSIE, and Lord DE ROS against the principle of promotion by selection, the debate, on the motion of the Duke of CAMBRIDGE, was adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS, FRIDAY, July 14.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—The adjourned debate on the Army Regulation Bill was resumed by Lord RUSSELL, who said that Purchase was so indefensible in principle that it only needed a Government declaration against it to insure its fall. It would, however, be necessary, in conformity with the uniform practice of Parliament, to make liberal provision for vested interests. Defining the relations which ought to exist between the Secretary of State for War and the Commander-in-Chief, he bore testimony to the perfect impartiality of the Duke of Cambridge. Interpreting the amendment as a simple expression of opinion that their Lordships required delay for the purpose of being furnished with further information, and, in short, a complete plan, he asked whether sufficient confidence could be felt, that if this Bill now passed the House of Commons would next Session agree to a complete scheme and vote the money for that purpose? Putting aside as unworthy of notice the allegation that the payment of extra-regulation prices would be dropped out of any future Bill that came up from the Commons, he said that if the Government had a plan he should feel great hopes that the abolition of Purchase would do no harm. As, however, they had no complete scheme he asked for further time, and should therefore support the amendment.—The Duke of CAMBRIDGE, after alluding to the peculiar position of the Commander-in-Chief, who only posessed by accident a seat in that House, joined in the hope and belief expressed by noble lords on the Ministerial benches that the selection of officers of the British army, if purchase were abolished, would not fall into the hands of the Treasury. It would be necessary for the Commander-in-Chief to remain entirely free from political bias, and although the duty proposed to be thrown upon him was most delicate and difficult he was prepared to undertake the task of promotion by selection if he were assured of the confidence of the army and the country. Purchase had, among other advantages, that of causing a constant flow of promotion, and Mr. Cardwell declared that he intended this flow to continue unimpeded. If promotion continued to be as rapid as at present—which was the essential element—no doubt selection was better than purchase. The other House had voted a liberal sum for carrying out the arrangement, and the offer of the Government must be regarded as liberal towards the officers. In conclusion, he declared that, whatever might be the fate of this Bill, he should devote his utmost energies to promote the efficiency of the army, and anxiously endeavour to carry out the plan which might be decided upon.—The debate was continued by Lord DE LA WARR, who, as a military man, made a practical speech in elucidation of the injurious working of purchase; by the Duke of RUTLAND, who said that the Government and himself were the only two parties in the country who were unprovided with a scheme of army organisation; by Lord HARDINGE, who characterised the Bill as so vague and sketchy that it unsettled everything and settled nothing; and by Lord STANLEY of ALDERLEY, whose doubts as to the expediency of passing the Bill had been removed by the speech of the Duke of Cambridge.—Lord VIVIAN characterised the Bill as a crotchet of the War Minister, and entertaining the strongest objection to a system of selection, from his personal knowledge of the pressure placed upon the heads of departments by their Parliamentary supporters, he should vote for the amendment.—The Duke of BEAUFORT would not support the amendment if he thought it would delay the desired Government scheme of Army Reorganisation. As a military man he was convinced that we should never have either a good Army or a good Reserve until the War Office returned to a system of twenty-one years' service. Instead of bringing in a Bill to abolish Purchase, which was generally acceptable to the officers, the Government would have done better to spend the money in making the service more popular, and raising the pay and pension of the soldier.—Lord CAMPERDOWN, vindicating the principle of selection as it exists in the Navy, denied that during the time he had been at the Admiralty the Secretary of the Treasury had ever interfered with the patronage of the Navy. Why, then, should it be assumed that improper influences would be brought to bear upon the Commander-in-Chief? He cited the circumstances of Naval retirement to show the impossibility of drawing up at the present moment any scheme of Army retirement which could be relied upon.—Lord MELVILLE having made a few remarks, Lord HUNTLEY cited the old Indian Army as a conspicuous illustration of the success of the discriminating system of promotion by selection.—The Duke of MANCHESTER said that if British officers displayed any want of tactical proficiency it was not owing to Purchase, but because they had no opportunity of taking part in the movements of large bodies of troops.—Lord DERBY, having been a member of the Royal Commission on Army Purchase, had the misfortune to differ from the majority of his friends upon the real issue now involved—whether Purchase was to be retained or abolished. If the Government were right in abolishing Purchase, he did not think it a sufficient reason for rejecting the Bill that their plan was incomplete. As to the suggestion of a Royal Commission, it was only another way of telling the Government to take back their measure and reconsider it. If, however, the thing were to be done, what object could be gained by hanging up the abolition of Purchase for two or three years? No institution could stand in the long run that did not admit of being successfully defended upon the hustings; and no subject more easily lent itself to popular misrepresentation than Army Purchase. He should be curious to see how many of those who most strenuously opposed the Bill in the other House—but who, he had observed, shrank from any justification of Purchase—would pledge themselves to its defence at the next election. If the amendment were carried what would happen in regard to over-regulation prices? Either an Act must be passed to declare them to be legal, or the officers must lose the £2,000,000 or £3,000,000 thus invested. The Government might, as Lord Russell argued, be regarded as pledged to their present offer, but the matter might be taken out of the hands both of the Government and the other House, and go before a different and final tribunal. If the system were really doomed he did not see what the officers were to gain by delay. Purchase did not rest upon an Act of Parliament, and might be abolished without one, and if it were put an end to by Royal Warrant, and if compensation were voted by the other House would not their Lordships' position become a little ridiculous? No doubt the Bill involved a great expenditure, and if peace continued the taxpayer might not be content to go on paying £16,000,000 a-year for army expenditure. Impelled by the conviction of many years, he exhorted their lordships to get rid of Purchase, when the public was favourable to a liberal settlement, and when it might be got rid of without wrong or injustice to any one.—Lord CARNARVON controverted some of the positions taken by Lord Derby and previous speakers, and opposed the Bill as incomplete, fragmentary, and unnecessary.—Lord LAWRENCE believed that the shortcomings of the British officer, especially in the higher branches of professional training, might be traced to the system of Purchase. He adduced various considerations suggested by his Indian experience in favour of a system of selection as likely to lead to the introduction of a more educated and efficient and equally gentlemanly class of officers.—On the motion of Lord ABINGER the debate was adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, July 14.—The East India (Bishops' Leave of Absence) Bill was read a second time.

NOTICES OF MOTION.—Colonel NORTH gave notice that, on going into Committee on Army Estimates, he would call attention to the fact that certain regiments in India were not yet supplied with the improved breech-loaders, and would ask whether the Government intended to have rifles issued to those regiments without delay.

NAUTICAL INCIDENTS.

The Golden Fleece is reported by cable, from Boston to Bombay, to be badly on fire at Halifax, N.S.

The Svea, of Bergen, Reed, from Newcastle to Bombay, with coals, was abandoned off Calais on July 8, having been in collision. She was afterwards passed on July 9, off Calais, bottom upwards. The crew have all been landed at Ramsgate.

A telegram from Bredasdorp, dated May 19, reports the Souvenance, from Pondicherry to Martinique, a complete wreck. Above 150 bodies had been washed ashore near Quorn Point.

The Wye, of Glasgow, from Rangoon to Liverpool, arrived at St. Helena, June 12, experienced a very heavy gale, May 17, in lat. 35 S., lon. 22 E., lost bulwarks on both sides, six stanchions on port side, had long boat smashed, and received other damage.

The Baroda, from Calcutta to Clyde, was spoken, on June 2, in lat. 16 S., lon. 4 W., with rudder head damaged by the Rowena, from Bassein, arrived at St. Helena.

The Sydenham, from Bassein to Falmouth, was spoken, on May 25, in lat. 33 S., lon. 15 E., with rudder damaged.

The Maritana, Macdonald, of and for Liverpool from Bombay, with cotton, silk, &c., put into Algoa Bay on May 26, making twelve inches water per hour, having experienced a succession of gales from May 1, in lat. 21 S., lon. 60 E., during which she also lost jibboom and some sails. The vessel is now safely moored in the harbour, and is discharging.

The Benvoirlich, from Hamburg to Akyab, got ashore on Goodwin on July 11, but was assisted off by boatmen with loss of anchor and part of chain, and is reported to be making a little water.

The Collingwood (str.), of Newcastle, Hutchinson, from Liverpool to Bombay, with general merchandise, sailed from Suez on April 24 last, and has not since been heard of.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

Messrs. Jay Cooke, M'Culloch, and Co.'s Weekly Circular, with Mail dates to July 22, and Cable despatches to July 12, says:—

"Owing to the heavy failure of a leading operator Wall-street matters have been rather unsettled, and in consequence the rate of interest for money on call has ranged 1 per cent. higher. Discounts on prime paper, however, remain at previous rates. The fact of the Five-Twenty Bonds being now current at prices equivalent to 1 to 1½ per cent. premium is unfavourable to the negotiation of the new Five per Cent. Loan, and the subscriptions are confined to nominal amounts by the banks. A rumour has been circulated that the Secretary of the Treasury contemplates calling 20,000,000 dols., of the Five-Twenties of 1862 held chiefly abroad, as a means of stimulating the demand in Egypt for the new Bonds; and as it is possible that the report may travel across the Atlantic, we taking this opportunity of stating, upon the highest authority, that the Secretary has no such operation in contemplation, but that, having sent his agents to Europe for the purpose of ascertaining the causes of the non-success of the new Loan, and the possibilities of stimulating its negotiation, he will await the result of those inquiries before attempting any new measures. Southern advices give more favourable accounts of the cotton crop. Thus far we find no reason to modify the opinion before expressed, that the probabilities of a falling off in the early crop have been over-estimated; though there seems to be nothing to warrant the hope that the supply will equal that of last year. The advance in cotton has produced a much healthier feeling in business in the South, and a liberal trade with that section during the Fall is anticipated. The grain crops are in excellent condition in all parts of the country."

WARRANT OFFICERS.—The Government of India have decided that warrant officers, holding honorary commission, will be permitted to make remittances to England on the same scale as regimental officers holding corresponding substantive rank.

THE CENSUS OF BOMBAY.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council has directed that, in obedience to the orders of the Government of India, a census be taken on the night of June 15 of all British-born commissioned officers and their families belonging to the staff corps or local service, and of British-born warrant and non-commissioned officers and others (their families included) employed in army departments. The requisite number of forms, with instructions for the filling up of the same, will be issued from the Bombay Education Society's Press. The returns, when filled in, are to be transmitted as follows:—1. Those for staff corps and local service officers through officers commanding stations to the adjutant general. 2. All others through heads of departments to the Secretary to Government, military department. It is to be understood that this order does not refer to any individual of H.M.'s British service whose name has already been returned in the census taken under Horse Guards' G.O., No. 19 of 1871. If it be found impracticable to take the census on the night of June 15, it should be taken on the very earliest subsequent date.

India-Office, 7th July, 1871.

BY ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

FOUR YOUNG MEN will be SELECTED in NOVEMBER next to be TRAINED and EDUCATED for the FOREST SERVICE of INDIA.

The course of Training and Instruction in Forestry and Cognate Sciences in France or Germany lasts for two years and a-half, previous to the departure of the Students for India at the end of 1874, and the Secretary of State will contribute, at the rate of £50 half-yearly, towards the Expenses of the Training of such Candidates as are favourably reported on by their Instructors. In addition to this, some weeks must be passed under a Forester in Scotland.

The Salary will be at first £300 a-year, and the Salaries of the Appointments in the three Presidencies range between that sum and £1,900 a-year.

Applicants must be British subjects, above Seventeen and under Twenty-three Years of Age, and unmarried.

Persons intending to become Candidates should at once apply for the particulars of these Appointments to the Assistant Secretary, Revenue Department, India Office, Westminster, as the Testimonials and Certificates required must be sent to the India Office before the 14th of October next.

MESSRS. GABRIEL'S

Extraordinary Improvements in ARTIFICIAL TEETH and PAINLESS DENTISTRY, Patent No. 562, improved Jan., 1871, afford the following advantages:—

2ndly. MODERATE CHARGES, accounted for by their extreme simplicity of construction, while the highest class of mechanism and materials only are employed.

3rdly. So successful an imitation of nature (springs being entirely dispensed with) that detection becomes an impossibility.

MESSRS. GABRIEL,

64, LUDGATE-HILL, CITY; and 56, HARLEY-STREET, CAVENDISH-SQUARE, LONDON.

(Their only Establishments.)

PARTIES AT A DISTANCE requiring Artificial Teeth may have them supplied, in partial or complete Sets, by Messrs. RUPTURES.—BY HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS, Perfected and Exhibited in the Great Exhibition of 1851, is allowed by upwards of 200 Medical Gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of Hernia. The use of a steel spring, so often hurtful in its effects, is here avoided; a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit) forwarded by post on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the Manufacturer, Mr. WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

Health to the sick, strength to the weak, and perfect digestion to the dyspeptic; purifying and renovating properties of a remarkable kind are the characteristics of these remedies. The poor sufferer, well nigh worn out by lengthened disease, may still be strengthened and restored by the tonic influence of these medicaments. In dyspepsia, loss of appetite, flatulence, and liver complaints, the Ointment should be rubbed over the digestive organs, while the Pills are taken. In heart and chest complaints it should be rubbed on the back and chest as assiduously as salt is rubbed into meat. By steady perseverance with this treatment the blood is purged of all impurities, and the whole animal system is thoroughly regulated.

THE PEOPLE OF INDIA:

A SERIES OF

PHOTOGRAPHIC ILLUSTRATIONS OF

THE RACES AND TRIBES OF HINDUSTAN,

ORIGINALLY PREPARED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF

AND REPRODUCED AT THE INDIA MUSEUM

BY ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

EDITED BY

J. FORBES WATSON AND JOHN WILLIAM KAYE.

MEMORANDUM.

In addition to the copies of this work prepared for the use of the Government, the Secretary of State for India in Council has authorised the publication of an edition for sale.

The work will contain about 450 Photographs on mounts, in eight volumes, super-royal 4to., and it will be issued at £2. 5s. per volume.

The First and Second Volumes are still on hand.

From the TIMES.

"We gather from the Preface that this work grew to its present handsome dimensions from a very modest commencement. It originated in the wish of Lord and Lady Canning to take home a private collection of photographs which might serve to recall the scenes and incidents of their Indian life, but as it advanced its importance began to be perceived, and Government, with a most judicious expenditure of public money, took it in hand. Very few of the photographs are unaccompanied by descriptions, often copious and graphic, of the subjects they illustrate, and the result is a singularly varied panorama of human life and character exhibited under almost every conceivable aspect. Although these four volumes deal with only a portion of the empire, there is scarcely a type of character, from the loftiest to the most debased, that is not to be found in them, and nowhere else, perhaps, in the world are peculiarities of character so strongly marked and sharply defined as in India. We might exhaust far more space than we can afford without giving the reader at all an adequate idea of the strange varieties of character to which these volumes introduce him."

LONDON: WM. H. ALLEN AND Co., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W., Publishers to the India Office.

LONDON: Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, Milford-lane, Strand, W.C.; and Published by JAMES PEARCE ALLEN, 13, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, S.W.—July 18, 1871.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, June 27; Agra and Madras, June 25; Calcutta, June 24.

THE news from India is chiefly of the humdrum sort that befits a rainy season, and a Government up in the Hills. Even the Legislative Council seems to have been taking a holiday nap. On the 13th of June however it met at Simlah to receive the Report of the Committee on the Punjab Local Rates Bill, and to hear Mr. Cockerell's arguments on behalf of his Bill to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the Civil Courts of Oudh. The present Bill, he said, proposed in Mr. F. Stephen's own words, "to put the whole of the law relating to the Courts in Oudh into one Act of an intelligible character." His reference to the prevailing confusion in Oudh was enforced by an able speech from Mr. Stephen himself, who exposed the great need for reforms in the judicial systems of all the non-regulation provinces. He instanced a curious question, which had been raised in the Punjab, whether a certain manual used by civil officers had or had not the force of law. "The volume made no pretensions to being anything more than a manual; it had been originally published for the use of officers, with the distinct orders of the Government of India that it was not to have the force of law; yet because it was introduced as a legal text-book in another province, it was contended that it had acquired the force of law in the province in which it was originally published." Mr. Stephen does not wish to make any needless changes in the present state of things, but only to throw the law into "a compendious, intelligible, and convenient form." Why, then, should he object to grant this particular manual the currency of formal law?

THE rumoured submersion of the Laccadive Islands, with the consequent destruction of crops and food for the islanders, appears to be a too wide inference from an undoubted fact. According to the Madras Athenæum at any rate, it seems that a violent storm had driven back to the Malabar coast a number of boats in which the Laccadive islanders were carrying home their yearly supply of food. These poor people, on further inquiry, declared that, as the weather made their return home impossible for the next three months, there would be a dearth of rice for their families unless a timely supply could be forwarded by steamer. For this reason it was that the Madras Government telegraphed to Bombay for a large supply of rice, salt, tobacco, and curry stuff to be shipped from Bombay for the imperilled islands. A great many of the Canara islanders who are also kept from their homes by stress of weather, were to be picked up by the Bombay steamer.

IT appears that the troops sent from Abbotabad to look after the Akazai raiders had a brush with these gentry, in which three of our men were killed and two wounded. A local paper declares that Atta Mohammed Khan, the reinstated Chief of Agror, had offered to go out and punish the raiders himself if the Government would supply him with powder and shot. This the Government was quite ready to do—if Atta Mohammed paid for the same. It is hardly necessary to add that the Chief declined the bargain, and left the authorities on whose goodsense he had so rashly misreckoned to settle the matter for themselves on their own penny-wise and pound-foolish system. For the credit of these gentlemen we should like to believe in the falsehood of such a story.

IT is seldom that we hear of violent deeds done in India by fanatics of other than the Mohammedan type. Now and then however Hindu bigotry takes a furious turn, especially in such a stronghold of Sikh orthodoxy as Umritsir. The manufacture of beef, especially by Mohammedan butchers, has always been a very sore point with the followers of Govind, and for some years at any rate their feelings were carefully respected by the English authorities, who placed certain easy restrictions on the slaughter of cattle and the sale of beef in the Punjab. Whether these rules are still in force we know not, but of late the Sikhs of Umritsir have been trying in vain to get the hateful practice abolished within the limits of their Holy City. On the failure of these efforts a body of armed men one night fell upon the slaughter-house, hacked four butchers to pieces in their sleep, and fearfully mangled two others, of whom one is since dead. The authors of this outrage are supposed to be either Nihungs or Akalies, in either case fanatics of the wildest type. We beg by the way to remind a contemporary that these Akalies do not hurl their hats.

A GOOD deal of speculation has been caused in Upper India by the sudden march of a sepoy detachment from Agra towards Ulwar in the hottest days of an Indian June. It is generally supposed that some kind of row had been brewing under the guidance of the ill-conditioned Rajah, with a view to embarrass the Political Agent. Latest advices however report all quiet in Ulwar, so that the unhappy warriors who had been sent forth to encounter heat such as Englishmen at home can never realise, had not even the excitement of coming battle to brace them up. The Delhi Gazette thinks that whoever caused the demonstration "should be made to know that froops are not moved in the hot season in vain." We suggest that the sufferers should get a round sum as extra batta, to be taken from the pockets of the offending parties, whoever they are.

THE Times of India inveighs in the most aggrieved tones against Sir Augustus Spencer for insisting that a British Colonel should command a brigade on review at Poonah in preference to an Indian Colonel six years his senior. As General Spencer gave no reason for the preference, it is possible that some wrong may have been done to Colonel Macleod of the 2nd Grenadiers, and that the journal in question and that old Indian officers for whose indignation it vouches do well to be angry. We are sorry to hear of so ill-advised an act on the part of a Commander-in-Chief who certainly showed no want of sympathy with the Indian army in his remarks on the unfair treatment of Indian officers with regard to their bonus claims. But was it right of Colonel Macleod to revenge himself by refusing to command his own regiment on parade because his junior was serving as brigadier? His absence at any rate provoked his Chief to send an aide-de-camp to his quarters with a request for his immediate attendance on parade. Such a request admitted of no refusal, and Colonel Macleod went accordingly; but having obeyed so far, he could not bring himself to obey altogether, and so after showing the Chief his regiment, he again withdrew from his proper post. If this is the way in which officers of rank illustrate the virtues of military discipline, can we wonder at the prevalence of an insubordinate spirit among their men?

THE new department of Revenue, Agriculture, and Commerce was formally created by a Government Decree of June 6, issued from Simlah. The following subjects are to come under its regular cognizance:—Land, rent, tuccavee advances, agriculture and horticulture, fibres and silk, studs and cattle-breeding, cattle disease, forests, meteorology, commerce and trade, customs, opium, salt, excise, stamps, minerals and geological survey, fisheries, industrial arts, museums, exhibitions, statistics, gazetteers, weights and measures, census, and surveys. Besides these, it will for the present deal with municipalities, lock-hospitals, emigration, Port Blair, and the Nicobar Islands. No wonder that the catalogue seems to the Pioneer "rather incongruous." One comfort is that the Foreign Office will now be relieved of much unsuitable business which will go to its proper place, the Home Department.

THE latest telegram from Calcutta declares that Yakoob Khan and his followers have been formally pardoned by the Ameer of Kabul. Yakoob himself remains in Kabul, but his younger brother, Ayoob, has been appointed Governor of Herat, whose garrison is to be relieved by Shere Ali's troops from Furrah.

THE Select Committee on the Euphrates Valley Route sat for the first time on Monday last, Sir S. Northcote in the chair. After Sir H. Rawlinson had explained the various schemes already broached for a railway from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf, General Chesney bore witness to the superior merits of the Euphrates Valley Line. His close acquaintance with the ground he had himself surveyed enabled him to speak strongly in favour of what he called the most certain, the best, and the quickest route, "whether for railway or water communication." It was short, direct, easy to engineer, would pay better and cost much less than the line by the Tigris. It was far better also, he showed, to start from the Mediterranean, where a British fleet could protect it, than from the Black Sea. On the advantages of such a line, both political and commercial, General Chesney laid a marked stress, especially observing that the country through which it would pass was more thickly peopled than that adjacent to any of the rival routes.

THE shrewd counsels of Lord Derby, aided by the ripe experience of Lord Lawrence, the frank acknowledgements of the Duke of Cambridge, and the sober example of Lord Longford, failed to withhold the Peers from the perilous pleasure of winning what Lord Granville called a "sterile victory" over the Government and the House of Commons in the matter of the Army Bill. At the end of a prolonged debate, which turned chiefly on the claims of seniority tempered by money over seniority tempered by selection, a clear majority of twenty-five resolved to provoke the very issue against which the recalcitrant Peers had been warned by speakers on both sides of the House. The fight for the dead body of Purchase, enlivened by Lord Salisbury's slashing blows against everything and everybody, and strengthened by Lord Strathnairn's straightforward hitting, ended in the fleeting triumph of its friends, and the seeming postponement of a disagreeable measure for at least another year. It was evident however to cool observers that nothing so hurtful, whether to the officers specially concerned or to the general interests of their service, would be allowed to happen, if the Government could prevent it. Having vainly appealed to the good sense of their opponents, the Government was almost certain to play its trump card in the shape of a Royal Warrant abolishing Purchase from a given date. Accordingly on Thursday last Mr. Gladstone and Lord Granville made similar announcements in both Houses, and the Duke of Richmond has since proclaimed his intention to accept the second reading of the Army Bill for the sake of the officers who are to be compensated. It appears however that the Lords are to save their dignity by means of a "rider" strongly condemning the way in which their late victory has been turned to naught by the unwonted "interposition of the Executive during the progress of a measure submitted to Parliament by her Majesty." The second reading therefore has been fixed for Monday, the 31st, which day, as Lord Cairns observed, "will suit the convenience of those who had made engagements for the next week." He omitted to add that the owner of Goodwood and some of his noble friends had very pressing engagements on that classic spot, with which of course no patriotic Englishman would dream of interfering for such a trifle as the passing of an unpleasant Bill.

THE Ministerial move has been denounced for various reasons by journalists on both sides. But it is hard to see what course the Government could have taken less likely to clash with constitutional usage or the rights of obstruction enjoyed by the Upper House. If it was needful to carry their measure this Session, and on that point they have everything to say, no other course held out so fair a prospect of avoiding direct collision with the Lords and saving the private interests of the officers. To reproach them for doing now what they might have done months ago is mere blind partisanship, stultified by all Mr. Gladstone's past conduct. To us it is quite clear that his first and chief aim was to deal liberally with the officers under an arrangement sanctioned by both Houses against the feeling of the more economic among his own followers. Baffled by the sorry statesmanship of the Peers, he has still elected to turn their position by a flank movement rather than storm it as he might have done in front. He has preferred, in short, the strategy of Moltke to that of Lord Gough. Whether the Lords withdraw in dignified silence from a false position, or keep up a noisy fire at him as they go, must be a matter of the slightest moment to one who leads a large majority of the Commons in accordance with the will of a yet larger majority in the whole nation. It is something also for the officers, whose cause was so rashly imperilled by the repugnant peers, to know that Mr. Gladstone means to stand by the terms of compensation granted them by the House of Commons, happen what may. If it pleases the Lords to censure him for obliging them to act fairly by their own clients, the latter at any rate will hardly thank them for so futile an outburst of wounded pride, while he himself will not take much to heart the angry utterances of conscious ill-success.

FOR the Indian officers who have waited so many years for the justice hitherto denied them, the Ministerial counter-stroke promises well. There is no further reason to doubt that the Army Bill in its present shape will pass the Lords, with or without the rider, in good time. That question settled, their claim to bonus compensation can hardly be shirked by any further reference to Lord Cranborne's evasive concessions. If the authorities would only realise the virtue of a timely graciousness, the Indian bonus question might be settled to-morrow to the contentment of all concerned. The aggrieved officers have already petitioned the Secretary of State for compensation on the terms conceded by the 4th Clause of the Army Bill to officers of the new Line Regiments; that is, for "the sums they would have received from their juniors had they retired before" a certain date. Let his Grace but hearken betimes to their prayer—grounded as it is on something very like a legal warrant, as well as a formal rule accepted by the Ministers of the Crown—and the old state of chronic irritation at unworthy usage will speedily pass away from the minds of many sufferers who have hitherto pleaded in vain.

In the Pall Mall Gazette of July 21 Sir G. Balfour gives a detailed reply to the strictures lately passed upon his former letters by a "Field Officer" in the same journal. His opponent having denied his statement as to the number of troops reduced "since 1863-64," Sir George reminds us that he spoke of reductions made since the year 1862-63, which is "a very different thing." He adds that he underrated the money cost of these reductions, in reckoning it on an average of £112. 4s., whereas the reductions since he left India have "fallen chiefly on the cavalry and artillery, the most expensive arms of the service." The cost of the army in 1862-63 would have been much less than it actually was, but for the successful resistance then made to Sir George's moderate proposals by an officer who has since been driven to make much larger reductions in all arms. With regard to the "incorrect" rates of cost struck by General Balfour "in 1862-63," Sir George says he struck no rates except in 1860; nor did those rates tally with the rates which the Field Officer quotes as his. Sir George then shows that the striking of rates does not depend on "immutability of circumstances," for "every great commercial and manufacturing establishment knows that, when it has once correctly analysed its charges, it is afterwards comparatively easy to make the required additions or subtractions which every changing year brings with it." The "hard and fast rates" which he is accused of fixing for all time were struck by his successor, two years after his own departure. Sir George did not "exceed his own rate" in 1862-63 by about £200,000, for that excess was due to an order of the Indian Government, made after his departure, in retractation of a previous pledge. That General Norman's Estimates for the current year showed a reduction not of £510 but of £37,507 on the actual outlay for 1862-63, was entirely owing to the "incorrect figures" used in General Norman's statement.

SIR GEORGE proceeds to show that when those "hard and fast rates" were fixed by him, the Indian Army was not "known to be unorganised," for the Bengal Army had been reorganised in 1861. As for no allowance being made for officering this army, the fact is that a gradual reduction has since his time been made in the number of officers on duty. The charge of cutting down establishments, emptying arsenals, and keeping up no reserves, is met with a flat denial. Official documents will also prove that the transport of the army was "most carefully provided for," and that measures were taken with the concurrence of Lord Canning's Government and the military chiefs for enabling movable columns to take the field at short notice. In answer to other charges of a like nature, General Balfour appeals to anyone acquainted with his views regarding true economy. Nor did he "astutely withdraw himself from the financial control of the army and its responsibilities" just when he knew that retrenchment had reached its utmost limits, for he left India on urgent medical leave without resigning his appointment, which was soon afterwards abolished by Lord Halifax. Sir George concludes his refutation of the Field Officer's charges by stating that the Home Government has ordered a searching review of the military expenditure on the principles adopted in 1859, with a view to ascertain what savings can be made without loss of efficiency. If the inquiry is fairly carried out in India, we should think that General Balfour will be fully justified by the result in the criticisms which have roused the ire of his military opponents.

A PRETTY little controversy has just begun in the Times between Sir Macdonald Stephenson and Mr. W. P. Andrew on the subject of the Euphrates Valley Railway. To some of the objections urged by the former Mr. Andrew makes a satisfactory reply. He shows for instance that there are two good alternative harbours on the Mediterranean coast, Alexandretta and Seleucia; and that Bussorah at the head of the Persian Gulf offers full accommodation for shipping. The alleged absence of local traffic is contradicted on the assurance of old residents, who declare that the country is fertile and highly cultivable, and who believe in the certainty of a net return of 5 per cent. on a capital of 8½ millions, more than double the sum needed for a narrow guage line. As for the proposed railway being "an isolated fragment devoid of strategical or political value," Mr. Andrew points out that "the very essence of the national value to Great Britain of a railway between the Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf lies in the fact that, having both its termini in the open sea, it would be completely under the control of this country. Such an advantage would be altogether wanting in the case of a railway carried from the Black Sea through the wild districts of Central Asia, whatever convenience such a railway might prove to Russia. The objection that a railway extended from Mesopotamia to Kurrachee would pass through regions thinly peopled by nomad tribes, would "apply with tenfold force" to a railway carried through Persia and Afghanistan. Some other of Sir M. Stephenson's arguments Mr. Andrew fails to meet, perhaps because he deemed them little worthy of notice. Nevertheless we should like to hear what he can say as to the comparative lengths of the Canal and Euphrates routes and the practical advantages of a longer line which has no breaks over a shorter line with nearly half-a-dozen. We should also be glad to know how far the Euphrates Valley Line would surpass the Suez Canal route in respect of average climate.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE INDIAN SERVICES, &c., REPORTED SINCE LAST PUBLICATION.

BENGAL.—Lieut. col. Moss, 6th regt., head of the gymnasium department in India, at Lucknow, June —. Mr. H. Hodge, inspector at the Gorale Bridge Works, drowned on June 22.

BOMBAY.—Surg. J. Lalor, medical storekeeper and professor of materia medica, Grant Medical College, at Bombay, June 17. Major Darrah, R.E., commanding Bombay Sappers and Miners, at Kirkee, June 21. Capt. W. F. Grey, R.A., at Bolarum, June 19. Lieut. E. Morgan, late Bombay Artillery, at Poonah, June 16. (The deceased arrived in India as a private soldier in the year 1831, and served twenty-nine years in the Bombay Artillery, finally winning his lieutenancy by his good services.)

PASSENGERS ARRIVED AT BRINDISI.

Per str. Nyanza, July 18.—From BOMBAY.—Archdeacon Leighye, Capt. Deubery, Mr. Aikman, Mr. Westlake, Mr. and Mrs. Vix, Mr. Bushby, Mr. Darrah, Mr. Owen, Mr. Forward, Mr. Cooper, Mr. Kranshaw, Surg. Hooper. From MADRAS.—Mr. Morris, Mr. Minchin, Mr. Wigram, Major Hankin. From CALCUTTA.—Mr. Man. From SHANGHAI.—Baron Van Rehfies, Madam Comillott, Mr. Wright. From HONG KONG.—Capt. Ragonby. From ALEXANDRIA.—Mr. Magnus, Capt. Walcott, Mr. Shakow.

PASSENGERS EXPECTED AT SOUTHAMPTON.

Per str. Australia, July 29.—From BOMBAY.—Mr. Windle, Mrs. Briscoe and infant, Lieut. J. W. Bernard, Mr. C. E. Pinn, Mr. R. D. Anderson. From MADRAS.—Mrs. Fostey, Mr. G. R. Walker and two infants, Asst. surg. Rejan, Dr. and Mrs. Kirkpatrick, Dr. and Mrs. Murray and child, Mrs. A. Walker and child. From CALCUTTA.—Mr. H. W. Abbott. From GALLE.—Mr. Dobree.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

INDIAN SURVEYS—II.

BEFORE Sir George Everest's withdrawal from the charge of the Great Trigonometrical Survey in 1843, much progress had meanwhile been made with the topographical surveys of India, under Colin Mackenzie, "one of the most indefatigable surveyors and persevering collectors of information that ever served this country." Mr. Markham's praises are borne out by his record of Mackenzie's labours from 1799, the year when he undertook the topographical survey of Mysore. In a few years his staff had measured 40,000 square miles of country, besides furnishing the India House with a large collection of maps and papers which have since somehow disappeared. As Surveyor-General, first of Madras, afterwards of India, Colonel Mackenzie enhanced the value of his special researches by his successful pursuit of archæological studies. To the discoverer of the Jain religion and the explorer of the great Buddhist "Tope" at Amravati "our knowledge of the literature and early history of Southern India is almost entirely due." Under such able subalterns as Garling, Conner, Ward, Turnbull, Keyes, Mountford, the whole of India south of the Kistnah, barring the unhealthy tract of hill-jungle near the Travancore frontier, was carefully measured on the base of Lambton's survey between 1810 and 1824. Meanwhile in Upper India Colonels Colebrooke, Garstin, and Crawford, had successively pushed forward the surveys begun in 1795 by Lieutenant Wood, and continued some years later by Captain Webb. Crawford was the first to impart anything like a correct idea of the enormous height of the Upper Himalayas, to the disgust of a Quarterly Reviewer who obstinately refused to believe that they could be nearly as high as the Andes. That question however has since been laid to rest beyond even the refuting powers of Quarterly Reviewers, by the decisive measurements of Sir Andrew Waugh.

Among other names of note at this period come those of Dr. Buchanan, who made a statistical survey of Bengal, of Hodgson and Herbert, who explored the hill-tracts between the Ganges and the Sutlej, of Franklin, the surveyor of Bundelkund, Johnson who measured much of Central India, the brothers Morrison who explored the Sunderbunds, and Monier Williams who went over Guzerat, Kutch, and Kattiwar. Colonel Blacker's career as Surveyor-General was cut short by a fatal fever in 1827. Three years later his place was filled by Everest, who was also conducting the great Trigonometrical Survey. In 1823 began the Revenue Surveys of the North-Western Provinces, in which perfect accuracy was often of necessity sacrificed to speed of execution. Under Colonel Blacker the Upper Brahmapootra was first explored in 1825 by Bedford, Wilcox, and Boulton. Munnipore and part of Cachar were examined by Captain Pemberton before 1830, and in the next few years Dr. Richardson and Captain Macleod made their difficult way from Maulmain to Ava and Kiang-Hung. Meanwhile the revision and extension of former surveys was steadily progressing all over Southern and Western India, under officers like Garling, Young, Macpherson, Grafton, Boyd, and Jervis.

Colonel Waugh, of the Bengal Engineers, took up with renewed energy the varied work bequeathed to him by Sir G. Everest. The Karara Series, passing through Rewah eastward to the Oudh Terai, interrupted by the illness of Jones and Scully, was completed in 1845 by Armstrong and Du Vernet, the latter of whom subsequently extended his surveys over a large part of Oudh. The deadly jungle-fever having slain Mr. Jones, his work upon the Gora Series was completed by Mr. Garforth. To fight indeed, whether with disease or human enemies, is the lot of many an Indian surveyor, who devotes his best energies to scientific work, "in the midst of as deadly peril as is met with on the field of battle, and with little or no prospect of reaping the reward that he deserves." Of the hazards thus incurred, the North-Eastern Himalaya Series is declared by Mr. Markham to have been "the most desperate," the average slaughter therein being "greater than in many famous battles." Begun in 1845, and completed in 1850, it was carried over 1,690 miles, from the Dehra Doon base to that of Sonakhoda in Purneah, through long tracts of deadly marsh and jungle lying at the foot of the Nepalese hills. The brunt of this dangerous work was borne by Mr. Logan, who died not long afterwards from diseases contracted in the performance of it. In one season forty of the natives employed on this survey died of jungle fever, and in another the whole of the surveying party was rendered helpless by the same scourge. Of the five officers who took charge of this Series, two retired and two were killed by the pestilential climate of the Terai. A like fate overtook several of the officers employed on the South Peninsula Series.

The conquest of Sindh and the Punjab opened out a new field of exploration for Colonel Waugh. From the Sironj and Dehra Dhoon bases his parties worked westwards to Kurrachee and Peshawar, over the rugged Aravalli Range, across the great deserts of Southern Sindh and amidst the lofty mountains of Kashmere. Renny-Tailyour and Strange successively conducted the survey of the great desert of Thurr, where 200 men had to be fed for several months on imported supplies, and the very stones for building the look-out towers had to be brought into the sandy solitudes from a distance of many miles. The work on the Indus Series over a length of 700 miles, interrupted by the Mutiny, was completed in 1860 under Major Walker. In conducting the Kashmere survey, Major Montgomerie had to set up his stations at fifteen, seventeen, and twenty thousand feet above the sea, amidst frequent snow-storms and dense fogs in which no work could be done. Still harder were the trials encountered by Captain Strange and his subalterns during their extended surveys of the Eastern coast from 1855 to 1860. They had to contend with "an inaccessible country, unhealthy climate, unfavourable state of the atmosphere, and an inefficient native staff." Jungle-fever crippled the whole party and six of their number died of cholera.

After seventeen years' conspicuous service General Sir Andrew Waugh retired in 1861, bearing with him the well-earned thanks of the Indian Government and the best wishes—to be followed erelong by the handsome farewell-gift—of "a splendid staff of surveyors who had been trained under his auspices." With so much zeal and skill had he pushed forward the great work entrusted to him, that his successor, Colonel Walker, could foretel its completion within a given number of years. Nor were his services ill appreciated by the leading men of science in this country. Year after year saw his labours commemorated in the annual addresses of presidents to the Royal Geographical Society, whose gold medal was specially awarded him in 1856.

Meanwhile, the Revenue and Topographical Surveys filled up the outlines of the Great Trigonometrical Survey, as carried forward under Sir A Waugh. The Jullundur Doab, Arracan, the Sunderbunds, and Nagpore were severally mapped out by Blagrave, Gastrell, O'Donel, and Van Renen; Hyderabad by Mulheran; Ganjam and the Cuttack Mehals by Saxton and Depree. Meadows Taylor did good work in the Berars until the Mutiny, and Robinson completed a thorough survey of the highlands in the Sind Sagur Doab. Kashmere was entrusted to Montgomerie, and Walker explored single-handed the Trans-Indus region from Peshawur to Dera Ismael Khan. Captain Priestley, the 74th Highlanders, superintended the Madras Revenue Survey. Hessey defined the boundaries of the coffee estates in Wynaad, and the Nilgherry and Khoondah Hills were explored by Colonel Ouchterlony. Waugh's late deputy, Colonel Thuillier, succeeded him in the post of Surveyor-General, while Colonel Walker continued the Great Trigonometrical Survey. Under the latter's able superintendence much ground, old or new, was explored by Keelan, Shelverton, Herschel, Basevi, Branfill, and Campbell. In 1864-5 Lieutenant Thuillier's party had a hard fight with sickness in the swamps and jungles of Eastern Bengal. Ryall's survey from Calcutta to Port Canning was checked by a plague of another kind, in the shape of lawsuits got up by men through whose gardens the line had to be taken. Good progress was made with the Eastern Frontier Series through some very difficult country. The whole of Lieutenant Trotter's party were struck down with fever near the "dense and deadly jungles of North Canara." Little less trying were the labours of Keelan in the Coast Series and of Shelverton in the Central Provinces. By the end of 1864 all Kashmere had been thoroughly surveyed, over an area of 70,000 square miles, under Captain Montgomerie, and the next year Mr. Johnson carried his instruments as far as Ilchi, the capital of Khotan. Erelong Montgomerie's bold "Pundits" were quietly taking observations on the tablelands of Thibet and Yarkand, under a disguise which Chinese jealousy failed to pierce. It was a happy thought to turn a Buddhist "praying-wheel" into a receptacle for scientific memoranda. To Montgomerie the Geographical Society awarded a gold medal, and to the Pundit who reached Lassa a gold watch.

In order to complete and rectify the results of the trigonometrical surveys in the measurement of heights and distances, separate parties have been employed in taking levels throughout the Peninsula, with special reference to the course of railways and canals. Other parties have lately been making good progress with astronomical surveys and observations, and a series of careful experiments with the pendulum has shown that the density of the earth's crust under and near the Himalayas is less than that of the strata underlying the plains to the south. In 1868 astronomical parties under Tennant and Branfill at Guntoor, with Herschel, Campbell, Haig, at Beejapore, made important discoveries in connection with the great solar eclipse of that year. It may now be said that the great work begun by Lambton has been carried almost to its concluding stage. "When the remainder of the Beder Series, that from the west coast to Bangalore, the continuation of the Jubbulpoor Series to the southward, and some revisions of old work are finished, there will be nothing more left to do in India Proper," and not much more in British Burmah. To Colonel Walker in all human likelihood is reserved the honour of bringing to a happy end the labours in which he has emulated his predecessors. Mr. Markham pays a just tribute to the "very noble band" of surveyors who have been trained to work under Lambton, Everest, Waugh, and Walker. "These men must combine the knowledge and habits of thought of a Cambridge Wrangler with the energy, resource, and presence of mind of an explorer or a backwoodsman, and they must add to this the gallantry and devotion which inspire the leader of a forlorn hope." In another issue we hope to glance over the record of late achievements in other fields of scientific research, to which Mr. Markham has devoted the remainder of his interesting memoir. For the present we must take leave of him in his own words, which slightly altered would apply in a certain measure to the volume that contains them. "The story of the Great Trigonometrical Survey, when fitly told, will form one of the proudest pages in the history of English domination in the East."

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE EX-NAWAB OF TONK.

The Delhi Gazette thinks that whatever may be the result of the motion in the House of Commons in the case of the ex-Nawab of Tonk, the general effect of the debate cannot but be most beneficial to India. We set aside altogether the question of the innocence or the guilt of the Nawab, in other words, his complicity or non-complicity with the alleged crime. We say alleged crime, for our readers must understand that there are two successive assumptions in the case, one dependent on the other. First it is presumed that there was a crime, that is, that the lives of the Lawa people which were lost were not sacrificed in an affray but to a pre-arranged plot. And secondly, if it be assumed or concluded that these lives were not lost in an affray but were sacrificed wantonly, then comes the question was the Nawab a party to the crime? We say we set aside altogether this particular question, whether there was such a crime committed and whether the Nawab was privy to it or not, in considering the bearing of the case upon India generally. That is not the issue. What is at issue now before Parliament is the great and important principle, whether the system is to be allowed to go on of treating Native Chiefs as if they were outlaws; whether they are to be considered amenable to English law and yet denied the rights accorded to every other class under the British constitution, of a fair and open trial before being sentenced or before having their personal rights invaded. That is the question at issue, and it is a very important one. The fact that so much interest was taken in the case, and that in an evening sitting on a Friday, after a morning sitting of five hours' duration, so many members should have taken the trouble to come down to the House to take part in a discussion on the grievances of a dethroned Indian Prince, shows either that India must be gaining ground in public attention at home, or that great activity must have been used to work up so much interest in a question of the kind. The fact that two members on opposite sides of the House, Mr. R. Fowler, a conservative, and Mr. Morrison, a liberal and a staunch supporter of Mr. Gladstone's Government should have proposed and seconded the motion for inquiry, shows that attention to the case has been given in quarters where we should have least expected it. When London bankers and country gentlemen turn their attention to complaints of injustice by the Indian Government towards Indian Nawabs we may be quite sure there is ground for inquiry. If the matter had been made a mere party question we should not have been surprised, for the opposition might have been glad to take up any stone, even an Indian grievance, to throw at the Government. But the fact of the Nawab's case being supported by men on both sides, and of all shades of political opinion, shows that these gentlemen are supporting it from conviction, and from an honest belief that the man has not had justice done to him. It is to be observed that all who spoke took up the same ground. Whether the Nawab was innocent or not was not the question; the question was has he been fairly treated. Even Sir E. Colebrooke, who spoke from the Government side of the question, made out but a poor case; indeed, this gentleman's argument, though intended to answer Mr. Fowler and Sir Charles Wingfield, in reality supported their view of the case. The solution of the question is, as we have said, fraught with important consequences. If the application be successful, or the case be referred, as suggested by Sir C. Wingfield, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, it will be a precedent for future cases of a similar nature; and in effect the very reform, the necessity of which Mr. Prichard has been so active in pointing out, will have been effected. The present unsatisfactory system of secret tribunals in so-called political cases, will be superseded by the healthy and constitutional practice of referring such matters to be determined by unbiased judges in open Court. And even if the motion be lost, and the efforts to obtain justice for the Nawab (by justice we mean a fair trial, not re-instatement without trial) prove abortive, the good will have been gained, that, public attention having been drawn to the matter, similar treatment to that accorded to the ex-Nawab of Tonk is not likely to be dealt out in the future to any other native chief.

THE INDIAN CAMP OF EXERCISE.

The Indian Daily News looks to see nothing but good come of the experiment, as far as the efficiency of the army is concerned. A word for the point selected. To our thinking it is the best in Upper India. It is centrally placed, and has railway communication with all parts of Northern India. If necessary, regiments could be made to pass through a course of camp instruction, without entailing on the state the expenses of long and weary marches, and without reducing our garrisons to too great an extent. The great mass of the Bengal Army is stationed in the country between Allahabad and Peshawur. The Punjab, as a matter of course, absorbs a greater force than the North-Western Provinces, whilst Oudh has quite a respectable garrison to itself. Such being the distribution of the army, a better site for a camp of instruction than Toglukhahad could scarcely have been selected, more especially when it is desirable that such a camp should be at some distance from great cantonments, like Meerut and Umballa. Of late years opportunities for massing troops have only been afforded by Durbars, when instead of the regular business of war, the troops—a brigade or two at the outside—have been frittered away in escort and ceremonial duties, and exhibited at formal field days. Three weak divisions ought to make a total of 20,000 men; a uniform strength of 10,000 to a division, made up of two brigades of 5,000 men each, would be better, however, since an army of three divisions of that strength could be worked with the staff required for the smaller number. If any army be abnormally strong, we trust it will be the cavalry, which has had few opportunities indeed of working together in bodies, or of learning the duties which now devolve on horsemen in actual war. The formation of such a camp will, we trust, be taken advantage of to ascertain the practical working under certain conditions of the present organisation of the native army. It will be interesting to discover how far in the operations of the field the native officer has taken the place of his European comrade, and how far a minimum number of English leaders interferes with the stability and efficiency of the native battalion. Further, the camp of instruction would be the best place for ascertaining the result of the experiment of arming certain native regiments with the Snider. The money spent in the camp will thus be well spent, and will not be grudged by the Indian tax-payer. The camp will be an object of general interest in the cold weather, not only because of the gathering together of a larger force than India has seen under one baton since the Mutiny, but because it may lead to an attempt to solve many questions connected with the army, conspicuous hitherto for their capacity for being shelved. Of the political influence of such a display of force we need not speak, though doubtless the consideration of its use as a political engine has had a great deal to do with the favour the camp has found in the eyes of the Government of India.

HYDERABAD RAILWAY.—We learn that great efforts are being made to open the Hyderabad railway to the Cogna river in eighteen months' time. The broad gauge has been adopted. The junction with the G. I. P. line will take place at twelve miles from Goolburga. It is expected that the line will be opened in 1874. The want of post-offices is severely felt by the railway staff, as according to present arrangements it takes twelve days to send a letter sixty miles. The postal arrangements in Hyderabad are under the Madras Postmaster General.—Delhi Gazette.

AN INDIAN WINE DISCOVERED.—We have been favoured with specimens of a new wine, produced from a common and well-known fruit of this country, the latent virtues of which have heretofore, it would seem, been unsuspected, at least by Europeans. The fruit we refer to is the dark, astringent, and sub-acid jamun, the Syzygium Jambutanum of the botanist, which, under the enterprising care of an Italian gentleman residing in Patna, a Mr. J. J. Varnier, has been made to yield an indigenous wine, named by the manufacturer Kenoinos. It would appear that some years ago Mr. Varnier was struck with the resemblance which the berry of the jamun-tree bore to a kind of astringent grape which grows near Milazzo and Mascali in Sicily, and which yields a generous, full-bodied, and, to Italians at least, a palatable wine. On analysing the jamun-fruit he found its approach to the grape in question greater than he had at first thought, and though to a certain degree deficient in vinous basis, yet capable of yielding good and palatable wine. On his return from a visit to Sicily Mr. Varnier tried experiments, and finally succeeded in inventing a process of producing wine out of the jamun. Encouraged by the result, he secured, in 1868, the aid of a skilled wine manufacturer from Sicily, and thereby had the satisfaction of turning out some wine, with what he calls, and we endorse the statement, "perfect success." Not only were the defects of the wine corrected, but its keeping qualities in this hot country are said to have been ensured beyond doubt. Age, it is reasonably expected, will refine and improve it more and more. Dr. Collins, of the Government opium factory at Patna, is of opinion that it will prove a wholesome and palatable beverage, and Dr. Cameron, of Monghyr, describes it as "pleasant to drink," and as "a very light wine, of a light red colour, of a sweet taste, bearing a great resemblance to claret cup." We have seen two varieties of the wine, and fancy that Dr. Cameron's description refers to she one which is called the Citronelle. The other one, which is named simply Kenoinos, would appear to be the one described by Dr. Cameron as "a stronger wine, not so sweet nor so pleasant to drink," but containing a large quantity of astringent matter, which would "doubtless prove useful for patients suffering from dysentery and diarrhœa." We congratulate Mr. Varnier on his success, and hope his Kenoinos and Kenoinos Citronelle will prove as profitable to him as they are pleasant to others.—Indian Daily News, June 17.

STATION TALK.

LUCKNOW, June 12.—A congratulatory letter has this day been sent from Lord Mayo to Sir Mohsun-ood-dowlah Bahadur, K.C.S.I., expressing the sincere pleasure his Excellency the Viceroy feels on account of his Highness having been at length suitably rewarded for the invaluable services which he rendered to Sir Henry Lawrence during the memorable siege of the Baillie Guard at Lucknow in 1857. His Excellency concludes by wishing his Highness long life and prosperity, and the attainment of every happiness which his loyalty and distinguished titles can confer upon him. It would thus appear that the Baillie Guard is not yet entirely forgotten by Government. It would not be out of place to remark that many who performed good service during the siege still remain unrewarded, and some in a starving condition are now living in this station. It is really too bad that Government does not and will not recognise their claims. Lady Couper is expected at Bombay by the next mail, and will join Sir George by the end of this month. The weather is still excessively hot, although we had a thunder-storm, which lasted the whole of last night, and a good shower of rain.

DEHRA DOON, June 13.—The corps of Sappers and Miners arrived here on the 10th. Owing to orders received, it is likely to be detained a short time previous to moving on towards Kalsi. The regiment is at present located in the lines formerly occupied by the Body Guard, which are conveniently situated on the road to Rajpore. The early extraordinarily damp weather experienced this year is already beginning to show its results in the Sanitaria above, and a few of those who had determined to enjoy a pleasant season in the hills have been driven away from them by the injurious effects on their health arising from a continued exposure to the cloud-laden atmosphere, and some have taken up their abode pro tem. in this more congenial valley. It would appear that epidemics have not been completely banished from Mussoorie, from whence they are occasionally transferred to the Doon, and consequently there have been a few cases of measles in Dehra, but happily no fatal ones.

NUSSEERABAD, June.—There is not much news stirring here just at present. I may, however, record the case of a felo de se. An unfortunate private soldier of the European Infantry (H.M.'s 8th of King's) some little while back committed suicide by blowing out his brains with a loaded military rifle; the horrible deed was, I believe, committed in the regimental hospital, of which the deceased had long been an inmate, and the incentive to it has been attributed to the extreme wretchedness of his existence; the family of the unfortunate suicide (for he was a married man) are in England. Mr. Leslie Saunders, late officiating deputy commissioner, Hoshyarpore, and recently appointed Commissioner of Ajmere, took over charge of his duties about a fortnight ago. He made, I believe, a tour through the division, coming in here on Sunday, the 28th ultimo, and is at present at Ajmere, organising his office establishment. His advent proved rather an unpropitious one for another Government establishment; I allude to the office of the Controller of Public Works Accounts, Rajpootana, which about the middle of April last had to vacate the premises of the Residency at Ajmere, which had held both it and its staff of clerks and accountants for the past year, to make room for those expected. This has caused some unpleasant altercations, particulars of which will not interest the public.

NYNEE TAL, June 13.—The volunteer movement has at length, after tottering from lukewarmness and the effects of a spirit of antagonism which manifested itself this season, occasioned it is said by the "too many cooks" tendency, found its legs, but not until Sir W. Muir, who is a zealous upholder of the "self-defence" system, interested himself in the matter and made it known that he wished to see the corps established on a firm and sound basis. Two meetings have therefore been called to revive or sign the death warrant of the corps, but happily for the future of Nynee Tal the vox populi is for revival, or rather organisation, as that which has had no being cannot be resuscitated. Government it, appears, intimated that it could not give its support to the project unless the numbers of members enrolled warranted it, and that the mininum number should not be less than sixty. As, however, not half this number had come forward, Captain Matthews called the aforesaid meetings and earnestly requested residents and visitors of the station to attend. The first meeting was very meagrely attended, and matters did not promise to favour the formation of the corps, but an energetic member of the mercantile community set to work in his wonted business-like way, and to his exertions, combined with the co-operative measures of our popular assistant commissioner, the formation of a Nynee Tal volunteer corps or company is in a great measure due. The infusoria or animalcula discovered by Dr. Lewis as the cause of the discoloration of the lake water last year have reappeared in patches all over the lake, rendering the water a very dark brown or chocolate colour where they abound. Strange to say that the water where it is free from the presence of these animalcula has never been known to have been so clear, and the hiding-places of rocks down immense depth along the edge of the lake can be espied through the crystalline fluid, thus proving the correctness of Dr. Lewis's remarks regarding the purity of the water inhabited by such infusoria. Malarious fever is said to be prevalent at the foot of the hills, and a gentleman who visited Kaladoongee lately brought it up with him. Travellers should therefore be careful not to stay longer than they can help at either Ranee-bagh or Kaladoongee dak bungalows. A native has been murdered between this and Almorah; the Commissioner has offered a reward of Rs. 100 for any information that may lead to the apprehension of the murderer.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

MILITARY DINNER.—On the 18th June upwards of twenty officers of Royal Engineers dined together at the United Service Club, Simla. The Right Hon. Lord Napier of Magdala, G.C.S.I., G.C.B., R.E., presided.

MINES IN MARWAR.—A native paper mentions the discovery of a silver and lead mine in the mountains of the Marwar State. The ore is said to be of good quality, and the mine promises to yield a large profit.

THE LATE RAID ON THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER.—The Chief of Agror offered to the Government of India to punish the Akarzaies who lately made a raid upon British villages, if the Government supplied him with necessary powder and shot. Government accepted the generous offer, on condition that he paid for the ammunition. The old chief broke off negotiations.

NEW MILITARY AND ORPHAN FUNDS.—The Englishman understands that a scheme for creating new military and orphan funds for staff corps officers has reached this country for report. The India-office has, it appears, discovered that some such funds are necessary in order to provide against the improvidence of officers, which would, without some such provision, cause a tax upon the Government. We are told that the draft scheme has been apparently drawn up by General Hannyngton; that it will probably be necessary to modify it considerably; and that its terms differ in some respects from those of existing funds, being especially harder in their treatment of bachelor subscribers.

PUBLIC WORKS.—The Indian Daily News informs us that a circular has been sent round to all civil officers, to the effect that as disbursements by them on public works without the knowledge of the Public Works Department, and without funds having been previously provided, tend to financial embarrassment and prevent the restriction of outlay within the grants assigned for the purpose, the Government of India, Financial Department, "desires that, in future, no expenditure whatever on public works shall, under any circumstances, be incurred by civil officers, excepting under the strictest observance of the rules laid down on this subject." Officers incurring any expenditure in disobedience to these orders are to be held personally responsible for such expenditure.

MARY WINCHESTER.—We regret to have to record that the negotiations made from the Chittagong side for the release of Mary Winchester have been unsuccessful. The Englishman informs us that the messengers have returned with the money offered as ransom, and report that the chief of the village in which the child is kept, as soon as they agreed to his first terms, stood out for more, and altogether declined to give her up. Action is now being taken from the Cachar side for her release, and until the result is known no more messengers will be despatched from the Chittagong side, as the chief appears to be playing off the negotiations from the north side against those from the south, and vice versa. In the meantime the little girl appears to be well treated.

KULINISM IN BENGAL.—A Tanna contemporary mentions some news from the east quite strange to us of the west. A Bengalee Brahmin having as many as four unmarried relatives on hand, viz., his two sisters, one aged about 42 and the other 32 years, and two nieces, one aged 18 and the other 16 years, gave them all in marriage, against their remonstrances, to a Kulin Brahmin boy of about 15 years of age!! Are Brahmin women really allowed to remain unmarried up to the age of 42, and so forth? And again, how are these four close relatives married to one individual at one and the same time? We hope some Bengal contemporary will take the necessary trouble to enlighten us as regards the laws of Kulin and other marriages of Bengal Brahmins.—Indu Prakash.

COURT-MARTIAL.—A Court-Martial has been ordered to try Colonel Shakespear Lowe, of the Commissariat Department, on charges connected with the recent embezzlements in the department at Peshawur. Our readers will remember that last year the Gomastah Heeree Lall and two others were convicted of fraud and embezzlement; as these took place during Colonel Lowe's term of office, that officer was ordered out from home to appear before a Court of Inquiry. This Court met at Peshawur in March last, and consisted of General Crawford Chamberlane, Colonel Thelwall and Major Davidson; the result of this enquiry is the Court-Martial now ordered. We have not yet heard what are the charges brought against Colonel Lowe, but it is reported that the trial will cause considerable excitement in military circles, amongst whom Colonel Lowe was much respected.—Delhi Gazette.

ULWAR.—The detachment of the 1st Bengal N.I., which left Agra some ten days ago for the Ulwar State, has been recalled, the anticipated disturbance having blown over.

HINDOO FANATICISM.—Fanatical Hindoos, who hate the slaughter of oxen, have made a raid on the butchers at Umritsur, murdering them wholesale while they slept. Also at Wazir Bholan a like tragedy was enacted. Of course enquiries are being made.

A CHAPLAIN REFUSING TO PERFORM THE BURIAL SERVICE ON A SUNDAY.—A woman died on a Saturday evening at Mooltan; her disease was of such a nature as to render it inadvisable to keep her remains over till Monday morning. The Mooltan Chaplain refused to perform the funeral service, on the ground that it was his practise never to bury any one on a Sunday. If a soldier was buried on Sunday an officer was obliged to read the service over his comrade's body. He recommended the mourners to "get a friend" to read the service, if they could not wait till Monday. The bereaved family applied in their distress to the Deputy Commissioner, who at once most kindly and considerately showed them every attention, and read the service appointed by the Church over the grave. In the name of common justice, is this duty one of those for which this minister draws his pay? We all know what his moral and social duties are, but what are those he is paid for? What, again, are his objections to the holy ceremonial he refuses to perform on the holiest of days? If it be a sin to perform it, how does he justify his advice to the mourners to get a friend to perform the sin?—Indian Public Opinion.

THE NABHA CHIEFSHIP.—The successor to the throne of Nabha is Sirdar Heera Singh Badrookhawalla, son of Sirdar Sookha Singh. His election is in accordance with the sunnud granted to the state in 1860 and her Majesty's proclamation in 1862, during the time of Rajah Bharpur Singh, who, like Bhugwan Singh, died without issue. By the untimely death of these two chiefs the elder branch of the great Phulkians family becomes extinct. The new Chief is described by the natives as a man clever, shrewd, and careful, and in every way fit for the position he is to occupy. The electors then made report to the Government of India. On account of this election, the Nabha state must pay a fine equal to one-third of its annual revenue. A similar fine was levied, according to the sunnud, on the late Rajah's accession to the throne, as he was elected in a similar manner. The original sunnud of 1860 was granted to the state chiefly in consequence of the gallant services of the Nabha chief and his men during the mutiny. Loodiana was defended by about one thousand men under the Rajah Bharpur Singh for six months, and he likewise furnished an escort to an important siege train from Phillour to Delhi. At Phillour one hundred and fifty Nabha troops, under the Deputy Commissioner, destroyed the bridge, and opposed the passage of the Jullunder mutineers, killing a great number of them. At Delhi three hundred men from the same state served throughout the siege, and besides these and many other good services at this important and critical time the state of Nabha advanced to our Government a loan of 2½ lakhs of rupees. For these services, besides personal honours to the Rajah, the Government conferred upon the ruler the power of life and death, the right of adoption, and the promise of non-interference of the British Government in the domestic affairs of the family and the internal arrangements of the state.—Indian Public Opinion.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, June 24.—Our market has continued to improve since last mail; no more failures have occurred among our bazar dealers, and confidence has been in a great measure restored. Values of goods, in sympathy with the upward movement in the home markets, have moved steadily upwards, and importers are very firm, many refusing to sell at the advance which has already been established. The confidence of holders, however, has so far only been partially shared by the dealers, the latter having only partially come forward; but, should no adverse telegrams reach us, more activity is expected to prevail, as stocks in second hands are mostly light. For Grey Shirtings the demand has again been fairly active, especially for 7 and 8½ lbs. 39-inch, and prices are firmer. The wide widths have further advanced under a continuance of the demand for Madras. Grey Twist: A steady business has been done in 40's during the week at firmer rates, and the higher numbers are also more inquired for, prices having an upward tendency. Coloured Twist continues quiet.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, June 24.—Saltpetre: The market has been very firm during the week, and, owing to the small supply of the best description, prices have slightly risen, and we now quote Calcutta refined, 2½ per cent. refraction, at Rs. 7-2 to 7-3, and 5 per cent. Calcutta-washed at Rs. 7 to 7-1. The unsold stock of all descriptions is about 750 tons. Linseed: There has been a steady demand for both Europe and America, and prices have remained firm, an advance having been established in some few instances for both boild and small. Rapeseed: Prices have somewhat hardened, and we quote yellow, 4 per cent. admixture, at from Rs. 5 to 5-1; yellow mixed, Rs. 4-10 to 4-11; brown, Rs. 4-2 to 4-6; and Eastern Bengal, Rs. 4 to 4-1. Raw Silk: The market has been more active, owing partly to the news from France and partly to reports of damage to the early crop in the Southern districts. The total sales have been nearly 200 bales, the prices ranging from Rs. 21-8 for filatures to Rs. 15 and 16 for the best native.

TIGER SLAYING.—We learn that Colonel Christie last week was the death of another tiger on the Neilgherries. The animal had the bad taste to snap up one of the colonel's dogs, and then to spring out of a sholah, sixteen feet from where its bereaved master stood. The gallant sportsman revenged the dog's death instanter, and thus added one more to his many trophies.—Madras Mail.

THE ABSENT HARBOUR ENGINEER.—The Madras Mail learns that, before leaving for England Mr. Robertson, the harbour engineer, arranged to return in October to see this coast under the influence of the monsoon. His tour in the Madras Presidency included inspections of the following places:—Mangalore, Calicut, Beypore, Cochin, Backwater from Chowghaut to Trevandrum, Tuticorin, Paumben, Porto Novo, Negapatam, Coringa, and Coconada. Mr. Robertson is instructed to report to the Government of India direct, and it was with the permission of that Government, obtained, while in Madras by telegram, that he went home to write out his reports. "It seems absurd enough," the Madras paper says, "that we should have a Government in Madras, and that such a matter as this should have to be managed at Calcutta."

TRADE IN BURMAH.—Intelligence has been received from British Burmah that the complaints regarding trade monopolies in Upper Burmah have been brought to an end, and that the state of affairs at the Court of Mandalay is entirely satisfactory. The only object of the King of Ava in carrying on a trade with the Shans was to develop the trade with the Shan states, through which, he thinks, indeed, that a better route towards China than that via Bhamo and Momein can be established; and as a proof that profit is not the King's object, he is selling goods to the Shans at prices which are lower than the market rates. Regarding the King's trade with China the accounts are not so favourable; in fact, his Majesty's scheme seems to have collapsed. The steamer Mandalay, which left for Bahmo on the 13th May, was to take 100,000 viss of salt, 30,000 viss of which belonged to the King, but so long as the Panthays hold Momein it is not anticipated that any Royal goods will be sent to that town.

CINCHONA BARK FROM BOMBAY.—The Bombay Government have requested the local authorities to authorise Mr. Broughton, the Government Quinologist, to make an analysis of some specimens of Cinchona bark forwarded to him direct by the Superintendent of Mahableshwar on the 6th May. Mr. Broughton has accordingly been ordered to carry out the wishes of the Bombay Government.—Madras Mail.

TINNIVELLY PEARL FISHERY.—Captain Richardson lately made an inspection of the pearl banks off Tuticorin, and it has been found that the oysters have not improved to any appreciable extent. It appears that in some places the divers brought up one oyster at a time, and it is believed that there is a combination among them. At the Pimiacoil banks the behaviour of the divers was such as to arouse suspicion, and the oysters so plentifully found on the previous inspection seemed to have left the place. On the bearing of the Trichendur bank not one well-grown oyster was found, and it is suspected that secret orders have been given by some of the dealers to frustrate the work. Captain Richardson also inspected the Manapud banks, but with no appreciable results. The divers brought up some oysters attached to the Pena shell, which were very much covered over with barnacles. These shells have been forwarded to the Government through the Board of Revenue. The Madura coast was next surveyed, and it was found that oysters were not so numerous as last year, and though the divers brought up a good many large-sized oysters, the fish was gone. From the Vypar banks a few oysters were obtained, but they were not much approved of. Captain Richardson has given over charge to Mr. Phipps, the permanent officer. The Collector of Tinnivelly intends making an inspection of the banks in due course, and it appears that the services of European divers will be engaged in place of the natives, who have proved so very distrustful. Mr. Phipps has been requested by the Government to devote as much time as he could to the careful and repeated examination of all the banks, and is to have the steamer Margaret Northcote at his disposal.—Madras Standard.

DEATH OF MAJOR DARRAH, R.E.—We regret to learn that Major Darrah, R.E., commanding the Sappers and Miners at Kirkee, died on June 21. The deceased officer was buried next evening with military honours. The late Major Darrah did good service in Abyssinia, in connection with the railway between Zoola and Koomaylee. It is expected that Captain B. H. Mathews, R.E., will succeed to the command of the Sappers and Miners.

THE FRENCH LOAN.—The New French Loan of £100,000,000 has been opened in Bombay. The subscription list has been closed. Tenders amounted to between 10 and 11 lakhs.

RAILWAYS.—The preliminary surveys of the proposed railway from Nagpore, via Kamptee, through the Bundara District to Raepore, have been laid out and sectioned.—The designs and estimates for the Wurdah and Wurrora Coal Field Railway have received the preliminary sanction of the Government of India, and the formal sanction of the Secretary of State is expected shortly.

POISONING A MOONSHEE.—The head moonshee in the office of the Judicial Commissioner in Sind had some datura administered to him in his evening meal on Thursday last. About six other persons who had partaken of the food were taken ill immediately afterwards; they and the moonshee are, however, now slowly recovering. Suspicion attaches to the cook, who is in custody.—Sind News, June 19.

THE LATE SURGEON J. LALOR, A.B.—We have to announce the death of Surgeon James Lalor, of the Bombay Medical Service, which occurred on June 17. The funeral took place at the Sewree Cemetery. Dr. Lalor had only recently taken up the joint appointments of Medical Storekeeper and Professor of Materia Medica at the Grant Medical College. Dr. Lalor went out, we believe, in 1857. Most of his service has been in Sinde, where he was for a considerable time in charge of the Lunatic Asylum at Larkhana. He had also travelled a good deal in Beloochistan and Mekran, with Colonel, now General, Goldsmid, and others of the Indo-European Telegraph staff. He also served with the Abyssinian Expedition between Zoulla and Senafe.

AN APPEAL TO THE CHIEFS AND TALOOKDARS OF KATTYWAR.—To all Chiefs and Talookdars of Kattywar.—The Political Agent has had brought to his notice cases in which destitute and helpless travellers, foreigners, and others dangerously ill and almost at the point of death, have been passed on from village to village, at the imminent risk of their lives, solely with a view to get rid of them, instead of forwarding them for treatment to the nearest dispensary or civil hospital. The Political Agent would earnestly call the attention of all chiefs and talookdars to this cruel custom, and urge upon them the necessity of taking stringent measures to put a stop to a practice as barbarous as it is inhuman. There are dispensaries and hospitals now in a great many of the chief towns, and it is the duty of the authorities to see that the destitute sick, and persons afflicted with dangerous and, in some cases, perhaps infectious diseases are removed to these institutions to undergo cure, and not killed by being driven from village to village, or allowed to spead contagion broadcast throughout the land.—W. W. ANDERSON, Political Agent.

OFFICIAL HONOUR.—The Mofussilite has the following:—"On dit, recently the Hon. F. S. Chapman, on returning to Bombay, had his travelling allowance refused by Mr. Trevor, the Examiner of Claims, and that gentleman was informed that, unless full explanation was given of the distance travelled, he should not be allowed the amount he claimed. The hon. gentleman was also informed that the Claims Department had no right to assume that his honour or veracity was greater than that of any other claimant; and that if he thought so, he should apply to the Government of India for a special dispensation. Under Mr. Trevor, the Claims Department is certainly getting courteons. This to a Counsellor of the Supreme Legislative Council!"

THE MURDER AT POONA.—We last week published telegraphic intelligence from Poona of a soldier of the 83rd Regiment having on Sunday evening shot one of his comrades and mortally wounded another. We now learn from Poona that Smith had made up his mind to shoot as many men as there were bullets in his revolver, but that fortunately the third barrel missed fire. The third man shot at was thus able to run at Smith and take the revolver from him. Smith was very cool at his examination before the magistrate, and said he had made up his mind to shoot at least six men, in order to put a stop to the blasphemy which there was near his bedside in the barracks. Those who saw the man and heard this say he looked perfectly sane, but still it is believed that he is insane.—Bombay Gazette, June 27.

MUSCAT NEWS.—Muscat Political Agency, June 10.—His Highness Syed Toorkee is residing at Muscat. The situation as regards Sohar is unchanged. A body of Syed Toorkee's troops continues to besiege that place, which is still in the hands of Ibrahim bin Ghes. The murder of Syed Mahomed bin Saeed, Governor of Samayel, by certain of the tribe Beni Rooaheb is reported. Agents have proceeded from Muscat to make investigation. Other parts of Oman are at present tranquil. Her Majesty's ship Magpie has taken three slave dhows off Ras-el-Had engaged in importing slaves from the Sowahel. In each case the vessels made in shore and landed the slaves. By the most spirited exertions the boat's crew of the Magpie succeeded in recovering upwards of sixty slaves, most of whom were children.—E. C. ROSS, H.B.M.'s Political Agent and Acting Consul, Muscat.

THE FRERE LAND AND PIER COMPANY.—The second ordinary general meeting meeting of the Frere Land and Pier Company was held yesterday, at the offices of Sir Charles Forbes and Co., the secretaries and treasurers, to receive the directors' report and statement of accounts to May 31, 1871; to elect directors in the place of Messrs. Cursetjee Nusserwanjee Cama and H. R. Cormack, who retired by rotation, but were eligible for re-election; and to appoint auditors and fix their remuneration. Mr. H. R. Cormack was called to the chair. The notice convening the meeting and the directors' report were read. Mr. A. J. Macdonald, of the firm of Sir Charles Forbes and Co., in answer to a shareholder, described the additional advantages to be in future derived by the company, especially those expected to follow the formation of a railway siding on the company's property, and the way in which it was proposed to carry into effect the proposed undertaking. Resolutions were then unanimously passed that the directors' report and balance-sheet, with the profit and loss account to 31st May 1871 be received and adopted; that the balance of profit, Rs. 5,847, be carried forward to the profit and loss account for the current year; that Messrs. Cursetjee Nusserwanjee Cama and H. R. Cormack be re-elected directors; and that Messrs. S. W. Read and Motiram Bhagoobhoy be elected auditors at a remuneration of Rs. 150 each. The meeting then separated.—Bombay Gazette, June 27.

THE HIGH COURT.—The following letter appears in the Bombay Gazette:—Sir,—Some people say the Secretary of State has refused a fourth Judge on the Original Side of the High Court. Some say that he told Lord Mayo to decide, and that he has decided against the addition. Be it as it may, it seems to me the same thing, and there is to be no fourth Judge. Now, in a recent memorial to Government from the Chamber of Commerce it is suggested that, apart from delays by the judges themselves, suitors have to complain of serious delay and inefficiency in the Prothonotary and Taxing Officers' offices, and also of the want of efficient translators. I am not going to discuss these points, though I am an unhappy sufferer—discussion must arise soon, and I bide my time. But as reform is the order of the day, I suggest that three courses are open to the Chief Justice: 1st—To select an able and efficient Civilian Judge to overhaul the subordinate departments of the original side, and to report on the procedure in them; 2nd—To let the Registrars and Prothonotaries on the Original and Appellate sides change places, say once a month; 3rd—To look into the working of all these offices himself, which I admit is an Utopian idea, though Mofussil Judges are not above the work. As to the want of efficient translators, I should like to know why there are not any number of efficient translators duly certified or licensed by the judges. Any way we want some energy and reform on the original side.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT AT MOOLA MOOTA RIVER.—SIXTEEN PERSONS DROWNED.—We regret to state that on the 14th June a terrible accident occurred at the River Moola Moota, in which sixteen persons were drowned. It appears that a wedding party of twenty-five persons proceeded from the village of Foorsungee (which is about seven miles from Poonah) to the village of Kesnund, about four miles from Foorsungee, and that while the party was returning from Kesnund, and were crossing the river Moola Moota opposite the Peshwa's Paga at Cowrie the party came to grief. Amongst them were five children and eleven women, some in bullock carts. There was a strong current running at the time, and it carried some of the carts into deep water, where all the unfortunate sixteen persons perished. The police patel of the village of Looee lost no time in reporting this sad accident to the Havalee chief constable, who proceeded at once to the scene of the accident, and made every necessary search for the dead bodies. Some of the bodies were found at two miles distance and some at four miles. They were taken out and made over to their friends and relatives, together with the ornaments and wearing apparel they had on their persons. The wedding was of the son of one Jogojee Hurfulla, inhabitant of the village of Foorsungee. Too much praise cannot be bestowed on the police chief constable of Havalee, who exerted himself in recovering all the dead bodies from different parts of the river.—Poonah Observer.

ARREST OF A MUTINEER OF 1857.—AN ACCESSORY TO THE MURDER OF SEVERAL EUROPEANS.—Last week the police succeeded in arresting a mutineer of 1857, by name Nubee Khan Lall Khan. The prisoner is a native of Mhowa Dabur, in the N. W. Provinces, and was concerned with two of his brothers in the massacre of some Europeans at Munorama, in the Goruckpore Zillah, during the rebellion of 1857-58. One Alla Bux Deen Mahomed Hajee, who knew the prisoner, saw him in Bombay about a week ago, gave information to the police, and caused him to be arrested. The prisoner was on Friday placed before Mr. Showell at the Girgaum Police-court, and was charged with having been an accessory to the murder of several Europeans (whose names are at present unknown) in the Goruckpore Zillah, N.W.P., during the rebellion of 1857-58. Alla Bux Deen Mahomed Hajee said:—I am without employ, and live at Telle Mohla. I came to Bombay four months ago from Kumeria, Zillah Busten, formerly Goruckpore. I have known the prisoner Nubbee Khan and his father Lall Khan from my youth. They belong to a village one koss from mine. I heard of the murder of six sahibs one evening at my village. One sahib ran away. This was in the year 1857. From that time the prisoner absconded. I understood that his name was taken down by sahibs who came afterwards to enquire about persons who had killed Europeans. Two brothers of the prisoner also absconded at the same time. I saw the prisoner about five or seven days ago in Bombay, and I gave information at the police-office and he was arrested.—Bombay Gazette, June 27.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, June 27.—Stocks of Grey Goods generally are very moderate, and importers are firm, in the belief that, as the advance which has taken place in the prices of Goods and Yarns is small compared with the rise in Cotton, the prices of the former must still improve. Grey Goods have been largely dealt in, but the transactions are chiefly of a speculative character; prices are firm, although not quotably altered. Shirtings generally are in demand. Maddapollams: A large business has been done, and prices are slightly better. Domestics neglected; no sales. T-Cloths dull, except 24-inch 4 lbs. Blue ends, which are in demand. Jacconets are active, and prices are firm. Bleached Goods show no change in prices. The business done has been small, and, except Mulls and Jacconets, which are inquired for, all kinds are extremely quiet. Dyed and Printed Goods are steadier. Yarns: A large business has been done, particularly in Turkey Red, and importers are very firm. Metals: Prices are unchanged.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, June 27—Cotton: On receipt of the telegrams of the 20th inst. from Liverpool there was a good deal of excitement here, and Dholleras was purchased as high as Rs. 225 per candy. The slightly unfavourable news which has since come had its effect on this market, causing a decline from the highest point touched, of Rs. 7 to 10 per candy, and a very small business to be done. The purchases made in the week have consequently been inconsiderable, aggregating about 11,000 bales for export.

ABOLITION OF PURCHASE IN THE ARMY.

Subjoined is the text of the Royal Warrant, dated July 20, 1871, to cancel and determine all Regulations authorising the Purchase or Sale or Exchange for Money of Commissions in the Army, from Nov. 1, 1871:—

Victoria R.

Whereas, by the Act passed in the Session holden in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of King Edward VI., chapter 16, intituled "Against Buying and Selling of Offices," and the Act passed in the forty-ninth year of the reign of King George III., chapter 126, intituled "An Act for the Prevention of the Sale and Brokerage of Offices," all officers in our forces are prohibited from selling or bargaining for the sale of any commission in our forces, and from taking or receiving any money for the exchange of any such commission, under the penalty of forfeiture of their commissions, and of being cashiered, and of divers other penalties, but the last-mentioned Act exempts from the penalties of the said Acts, purchases or sales or exchanges of any commissions in our forces for such prices as may be regulated and fixed by any regulation made or to be made by us in that behalf;

And whereas we think it expedient to put an end to all such regulations, and to all sales and purchases and all exchanges for money of commissions in our forces, and all dealings relating to such sales, purchases, or exchanges;

Now our will and pleasure is, that on and after the 1st day of November in this present year, all regulations made by us or any of our Royal predecessors, or any officers acting under our authority, regulating or fixing the prices at which any commissions in our forces may be purchased, sold, or exchanged, or in any way authorising the purchase or sale or exchange for money of any such commissions, shall be cancelled and determined.

Given at our Court at Osborne this 20th day of July, in the thirty-fifth year of our reign. By her Majesty's Command, Edward Cardwell.

LONDON ASSOCIATION FOR SOCIAL PROGRESS IN INDIA.

On Friday evening the third lecture (and last for the present season) under the auspices of the Association in Aid of Social Progress in India, was delivered by S. N. Banerjea, Esq., of the Indian Civil Service, at 1, Adam-street, Adelphi. His subject was "The Evils of Hindu Society in Bengal." Seventy persons were present, including Professor Goldstücker, who presided, Dr. Underhill, Mrs. Akroyd, Mr. and Mrs. Hickson, Professor William Hunter; Revs. T. L. Marshall, T. Hunter, R. Miller, and J. Berryhill, Drs. Krishna S. Ghose, Gopaul Chunder Roy, and Baukabihari Gupta; Hurry Chund Chintamon, of Bombay; Syed Ameer Ali, Madame Roniger, Mr. and Mrs. Tidy, Mr. Addyes Scott, Mr. Prichard, Mr. Webster, Mrs. Turner, Miss E. Sharpe, Miss Toulmin Smith, Mrs. and Miss Hill, Mr. Cooper, K. G. Deshmuckh, Ardesheer B. Kapadia, Baboo Jasipada Banerjee, of Barahanagar; Prosonna Romar Roy, Rakhal Roy, &c., &c.

Mr. Banerjea began by saying no country presented a greater anomaly than India. Our minds, he said, have been alienated from old modes of thought. Hindoo society is now in a transition state, and it is easier to reform its evils than will be the case after it has acquired more fixity. Our revolutionary tendencies fit us to strike a blow at them, when we once understand them. They are on the surface of society. First, there is caste. In the laws of Menu society is divided into four parts. But the earliest mention of caste is in one of the later Vedas, the Yajua-Veda. It originated not in Bactria, but in India, when the Hindoos were already a settled people at the base of the Himalaya. He then explained how division of labour had acquired a fixed hereditary character. The prohibition of intermarriage between different castes had been less rigorous in the early time. He thought it did not exist when the system was first definitely formed. The system as it now exists is much modified. There is no military caste now, though the Rajpoots claim it. The third caste has been subdivided into a great number of different trades. The Sudras remain as they were. He then spoke on the practical aspect of the question. Caste implies a waste of talent and energies. The chief incident of caste is prohibition of intermarriage. This evil is not so much felt, owing to the zenana system. The despotic power of parents over their childrens' marriages prevents the institution of courtship from coming into existence. Otherwise we should see the truth of the maxim Amor vincit omnia. From a wider point of view, caste is a prolific source of mischief, preventing the fusion of races. The Mahommedans had been in India eight centuries, with no perceptible fusion between them and Hindus. Hindus will often not mix even with those of the same caste, if they are from a different province. He laid great stress on the unification, so far as possible, of the countless races of India. Foreign intermixture improves a race. We should wish to combine the intelligence of the Bengalee with the courage of the Sikh and the honour of the Rajpoot. A community with caste is less happy than one without. How can caste be got rid of? The weapon recommended was religious teaching. He thought that without English education mere religious teaching would do little. People may become Christians and yet retain caste, as has been done by the natives of the Malabar coast. Secular English education is certainly the great weapon which is to destroy it. He then spoke of the evil of early or child marriage, as preventing young mothers from receiving instruction, and as leading to physical and mental debility in children. He passed to another evil, the prohibition of widows from remarriage. It is doubtful if the early Hindu books prohibit this. Certainly they discourage it. A similar custom is ascribed to the Germans by Tacitus. He described the fasts, penances, &c., enjoined on widows. The Bengal code allowed a widow to succeed to her husband's property on failure of male issue, but only as trustee for the next heirs, from whom she is entitled to a maintenance. In 1855 the Pundit principal of the Sanscrit College made a vigorous effort to alter the customs relating to widows, appealing to the sacred books. The opposition was obstinate. Widows' marriages are still of so rare occurrence as to give rise when they occur to long leading articles in the Indian journals. English education will do a great deal for our society, because it influences the heart as well as the mind, and because it is practical. It has been said that we are a nation of talkers. English education will do away with that. As to the zenana system, he said, we all know how much grace, gentleness, and animation are infused in a social gathering where there are ladies. Under the zenana system the mind suffers as well as the body. How can we educate those who have not the advantage of moving in any society? There is no strong inducement for them to learn. A Hindu community will always value learning. English education and modes of thought would make it impossible for a young Hindu not to see that the ladies of India would exert the same charm. He then alluded to the "joint family system," under which persons descended from a common ancestor lived in the same family, and held their property in common. This included persons remotely connected, and led to numbers of idle dependents on rich families, and to mistaken notions of charity. This carries us back to the patriarchal state. He compared it to the feudal system in Europe, and expressed the view that it would disappear from similar causes. It is prejudicial to a spirit of self-dependence. The happiness of man is intimately connected with labour. People thus left dependent often become the dregs of society. The system interferes with domestic happiness. We do not like to be too closely associated in daily life, even with our best friends. Because a man helps his relatives, must he therefore live with them? A poor man who has not enough for his own may be called upon to provide for the joint family. Many an unfortunate man is thus led to offences against the penal law. The English mode of living will destroy this. He described polygamy as almost abolished. Summing up, he said the task of social reform in India was a gigantic one. They had a right to the sympathy of civilised Europe, and especially of England. They owed a duty to their country far more sacred, far more binding than those prescribed by a capricious superstition. The philanthropist was more worthy than the ascetic or the saint. Englishmen are bound by their Christianity and civilisation to assist in Indian civilisation. This will be the noblest conquest in their history. It will be the triumph of moral force. They will have created in the hearts of the nation a monumentum ære perennius. A distant posterity will look back to these islands with mingled feelings of devotion and gratitude.

The various topics presented by the lecturer were afterwards discussed at some length by Professor Hunter, Mr. Cooper, Mr. Scott, Dr. Roy, Dr. Ghose, and the learned Chairman. A very instructive evening was concluded with a vote of thanks to Mr. Banerjea and to Dr. Goldstucker. It was announced that arrangements would be made for resuming the lectures in October.

SIR BARTLE FRERE ON THE MEANS OF ASCERTAINING PUBLIC OPINION IN INDIA.

The second adjourned meeting of the East India Association was held at the Society of Arts on the 19th inst., to further discuss the subject of Sir Bartle Frere's address on "The Means of Ascertaining Public Opinion in India;" General Sir Vincent Eyre in the chair.

Sir Mordaunt Wells re-opened the discussion. He said he was a staunch supporter of the views of Sir Bartle Frere with regard to the necessity for more intimate political and social relations between the European occupants of India and the native communities. He supported the plan devised by Sir B. Frere to effect that object, viz., a gradation of provincial councils, beginning with the primitive village representation. He gave as some of his reasons for adhering to the scheme the following:—Municipal bodies composed of mixed classes of natives and Europeans had been shown by Sir Donald Macleod to be a success. They had worked so well that the ex-Governor of the Punjab proposed to extend or widen the principle of such courts. He (Sir M. Wells) had travelled through a large portion of Russia last year, and visited some forty villages. In each he had found village councils, which attended to the simplest social arrangement, from the laying a plank across a ditch to the erection of a bridge. They sent their representatives to the higher provincial assemblies, which had the power to impose taxes. Here was an example of an instructive kind. Irrespective of the presence of a foreign ruler, the natives of India had no such organisation. The recent obnoxious education cess could not have been imposed upon the people of India had Government better understood them. In the Western Provinces the natives had declared that they would postpone education rather than the Government should introduce an unjust tax contrary to the law of settlement. This had been testified to by a high native official, Kazi Shahabudin, who had given evidence before the Indian Finance Committee. He (Sir M. Wells) insisted upon education as a leading principle to be applied in the amelioration of the condition of the people. He concluded by declaring that the permanence of the British rule in India now depended upon the most liberal form of legislation to raise the people from a state of primitive ignorance to an intelligent conception of the benefits of civilisation. The proposed scheme of "municipal councils," leading up to a representative or even electoral system, would be the best means of attaining that object.

Dr. Mouat, approving of Sir Bartle Frere's scheme of progressive local representative government, related some of his experiences of native character and opinions to illustrate how desirous educated natives were to adopt the European principles of education and to benefit by Western civilisation. But he considered that the plans of such an admirable Indian reformer as Sir Bartle would never take effect unless they were discussed in India as well as in England; therefore a movement and agitation should be created in that country as the more immediate step by which to found the municipal institutions now devised. He said this much from the experience of many years travel and sojourn in the Bengal presidency. The most fatal evil the natives suffered from was an over taxation, amounting to the universal rack-rent of the whole population.

Dr. Mullins followed Dr. Mouat in his views with regard to the educational wants and the isolation of the people from the Government, and, vice versa. As a missionary he had seen much of the natives. The simple agriculturists were a mild, even amiable, people.

But there were many diversities in the population which constituted the 150,000,000, and, therefore, he said you must not think of legislating or educating all as if they were naturally united communities. Separate plans or modes of procedure were necessary for the adoption of separate classes.

Dr. Ghose referred to the artificial state of the administrative and executive power as it regarded the interests of the natives of India. There must be better faith established on both sides. The natives were not up to the present time in bona fide communication with the Government. They had no real representative power although native princes, nobles, and gentry sat in the Legislative Councils of Calcutta, Madras, or Bombay. The native element of legislation had not found the free and independent action that was requisite for true national representation. The executive of the Government as carried out in the distant provinces by means of despotic and unsympathetic European officials scared instead of conciliating the natives. He spoke from the experience of having been himself a member of one of the provincial councils in the Bengal Presidency. His experience was that generally the European influence nearly always overrode the native at the council boards. Higher up in legislation natives of rank, position, and intelligence had no independent action in the council at which they sat. For the reasons given, therefore, he desired to see a free representative system for the natives of all classes. Let the voices of all be heard and you would then know the extent of their wants and wishes.

Mr. Dickinson argued that the ignorance and apathy of the natives in regard to public affairs was so great that it would be found an immense difficulty to surmount. Such native representation as the people had in the legislative councils of the presidency was a mere sham.

General Sir George Le Grand Jacob expressed his approval of the principle of provincial councils as a means of arriving at a correct estimate of public opinion in India. The village councils already in existence would form the nucleus of the municipal institutions. But the representative system should be of the simplest form. The natives had no idea of voting or the electoral systems. Before, however, we could make any advance in obtaining fair political representation for them, we should have to become better acquainted with the customs and usages of so many different races. We now, through our own ignorance, trample down the public opinion that we ought to cultivate. Our interference with the law of adoption, so much venerated and revered by the Hindoos, had given great dissatisfaction. It had been one of the principal causes, he believed, of the great Mutiny of 1857.

Mr. J. M. Ludlow advocated the principle of consultative bodies in villages and towns, and looked forward to the gradual introduction of the electoral voting and registration system.

Sir Bartle Frere rose to reply amid loud cheers. He succinctly reviewed the statements and opinions of the several speakers, and stated that his views at present assumed only the form of suggestions, although the time could not be far distant when national representation would be extended to the people of India. A speaker had said why not leave things as they were and abstain from interference with existing arrangements. The answer was we dared not leave things alone. The people were more and more requiring and appealing for a reform of the administrative and executive system which exposed them to a despotic form of taxation. The masses needed the amelioration of their material condition even before education itself. After tracing the representative institutions that existed among the agricultural population, from the primitive village council upward, Sir Bartle Frere proposed to frame the municipal government upon the plan of the parochial boards of England. The opener concluded by expressing his faith and confidence that the support of the princes, nobility, and educated community of the country would be extended to the due carrying out of the national and ameliorative principles he advocated.

The proceedings concluded with the Chairman passing a vote of thanks to Sir Bartle Frere for his valuable communication.

Sir Vincent Eyre said he fully anticipated the most important results to arise from the movement begun by Sir Bartle Frere.

Miscellaneous.

AGES OF SOLDIERS.—A War return, compiled from the latest monthly statements of non-commissioned officers and men in the Service, shows a force (excluding an incomplete return of the Army Service Corps) amounting to 180,410 Cavalry, Artillery, Engineers, Guards, Infantry, Colonial Corps. Of this number 5,264 are returned as under 18 years of age; 13,697, 18 to 19; 15,426, 19 to 20; 49,104, 20 to 25; 39,175, 25 to 30; 37,141, 30 to 35; 16,874, 35 to 40; 3,685, upwards of 40 years of age; 41, age not known. Including the Army Service Corps, but excluding the Royal Engineers, whose returns are not for the same ages, 85,339, or about half the whole number, have seen less than six years' service; 38,733, 6 to 11 years; 38,105, 11 to 15 years; 15,808, upwards of 15 years' service; 105, period of service not known. In the financial year 1870-71, 32,285 recruits were passed into the Service, and 13,600 men were discharged therefrom.

INDIAN APPEAL BEFORE THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.—KOOLDEEP NAIAM SING V. THE GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL.—This was an appeal from the Presidency of Bengal. Sir J. Colvile gave the judgment of their Lordships without hearing the respondent, dismissing the appeal, with costs. The sittings concluded on June 20.

PASSPORTS IN FRANCE.—A passport, duly vise by the French and Belgian consuls, is indispensable to all on their way to India, who may have to pass through France and Belgium to Brindisi. Without such a document, so vise, the passenger will have to return to London, and will thus lose his passage. The production of a ticket proving that he has paid his passage to India is of no use whatever.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON EAST INDIAN FINANCE held its last sitting this session on July 18, and made an ad interim report, laying the evidence taken before the House of Commons, and suggesting the reappointment of the committee next session. The only specific recommendation yet made by the committee suggests that the extension of the Permanent Settlement in India should be suspended.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £400,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 19th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta £295,000, to Bombay £100,000, and to Madras £5,000. The minimum price was fixed as before at 1s. 10½d. on all the presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10⅝d. will receive about 24 per cent., and on Bombay at that price about 55 per cent. Those above in full.

INDIAN SERVICE.—Having regard to the youth of the great majority of the men composing the four corps under orders for India during the relief season, 1871-72, a correspondent interested in the Royal County Downs makes the following suggestion:—"There are two regiments at the Cape (32nd and 86th) both strong as regards numbers, and with few men under twenty-two years of age, and with still four years more 'foreign service.' Why not send these two regiments on to India, relieving them by two others unfit for tropical service? By the time the period of foreign service of the two former is up, the two latter would be fit to take their places. This method would not be expensive, and would, I fancy, be popular. No regiments should be kept at the Cape for a longer period than three years, as they become quite demoralised from drink."—Army and Navy Gazette.

MILITARY.—The death of General E. Garstin, Royal (late Bengal) Engineers, which occurred at Bangalore on the 13th ult., promotes Lieutenant-General H. Goodwyn, R.E., to the rank of general, Major-General W. B. Goodfellow, R.E., to that of lieutenant-general, and Colonel C. A. Orr, R.E., to that of major-general in the Army.—Lieutenant-General Lord Napier of Magdala will succeed to the Royal Engineers colonel's allowances rendered vacant by the death of General Garstin.—101st Fusiliers.—After a sojourn of about fifteen months at the station, the regiment will leave Aldershot at the end of September. Winchester was the scene on Tuesday of a grand display in connection with this distinguished regiment. In its cathedral for some time past, besides the memorial in stone and glass, with the tattered colours, to the 97th Regiment, there has been a monument to a portion of the Bengal Fusiliers who fell or died from wounds received in action at the Umbeylah Pass, in 1863. It carries the device and some of the honours of the regiment, and a glorious roll of honourable victories:—Plassy, Affghanistan, Buxar, Ghuznee, Guzerat, Ferozeshah, Deig, Sobraon, Bhurtpore, Pegu, Delhi, Lucknow. On Tuesday, this tablet of remembrance was surmounted by the old colours of the late 1st Bengal Fusiliers, tattered and rent in many a fight and siege; and here it, with other remembrances of a similar nobility, will remain to mark the valour of the English race and soldier. On the above day, the old colours were sent from Aldershot by an escort commanded by Captain Butler, V.C., who was wounded at Delhi and Lucknow. The escort was received at the station by the 46th Regiment, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel C. R. Catty, and the local Volunteer corps, and was played into barracks, where the colours were "trooped" with the accustomed ceremonies. The escort, the 46th, and the Volunteers then marched to the cathedral, where a Psalm was chanted. An appropriate address by Canon Carus was then delivered, when the honoured remains were placed over the monument, the band of the 46th playing the National Anthem, and after the Old Hundredth had been finely sung in unison, the troops defiled past the colours. In the evening the 46th exercised the duty of hospitality to officers of the escort, the "non-coms." of the 46th entertaining their brothers of the 101st. The following officers attended the ceremony in the cathedral:—General Warren, severely wounded whilst leading the storming party at Ghuznee; Colonel Salusbury, C.B., wounded whilst carrying the Queen's colours at Ferozeshah; Colonel Innes, also whilst carrying the regimental colour; Colonel Brown, severely wounded at Delhi; Lieutenant-Colonel Lambert (now commanding), wounded at Sobraon and Burmah; Major St. George, wounded at Lucknow; Major Parsons, wounded at Cawnpore; Captain Daniell, wounded at Delhi; and Captain Ellis, wounded at Delhi.—102nd Fusiliers.—This regiment will take part with the Aldershot division in the autumn manœuvres in Berkshire, and will return to Aldershot and take over permanent quarters for the winter.

CAMEL BATTERIES FOR INDIA.—Colonel H. H. Maxwell, R.E., superintendent of the Royal Gun Factories at Cossipore, India, has forwarded to the Royal Artillery Institution at Woolwich a proposal for the establishment of camel batteries for that country on a plan somewhat similar to that adopted in the Persian army. He states there is a splendid breed of camels in the north-west of India whose locomotive and carrying powers it is desirable to utilise for military purposes, and he suggests that a small rifled cannon of about 112 lbs. weight, or a Gatling gun of the same weight, shall be adopted for that service, the guns being mounted on the camels' backs by means of suitable saddles and tackle. The animal, being made to kneel down before firing, with his legs tucked under him, forms a steady platform, and would scarcely feel the discharge. Besides the gun each camel would carry an infantry soldier armed with his musket, and sixty rounds of ball cartridge, forming a corps which, from its powers of locomotion and its combination of artillery and musketry fire, would be of exceeding value from a strategical and tactical point of view. Camels thus equipped could travel thirty-five to fifty miles a-day.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.—The Lord Chancellor's new Bill, making further provision for the despatch of business by the Judicial Committee, now in the House of Commons, empowers her Majesty by warrant to appoint four new members of the Judicial Committee from among the judges and ex-judges of the English and Indian bench. It provides that when a judge is appointed a member of the Judicial Committee he shall vacate his office of judge, but that in relation to salary and pension his position shall remain unchanged: and that when an ex-judge is appointed he shall receive a salary of £1,500 a-year in addition to his pension, which, in the case of an English judge is £3,500 a-year, and of an Indian judge £2,000 a-year; and this additional salary is to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom. Mr. Watkin Williams has given notice of some amendments. The first amendment provides that these new members shall hold office as judges of the Judicial Committee "quamdui se bene gesserint"—i. e., during good behaviour—and shall be removable from their office by the Crown only upon the address of both Houses of Parliament. Another amendment provides that service by a judge upon the Judicial Committee shall entitle his clerks to their salaries as heretofore. A third amendment provides that each of the judges shall be paid in addition to any existing salary or pension such a sum as will make up a total salary of £6,000 a-year.

THE ALBERT LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—Lord Cairns, who sits as supreme arbitrator under the Albert Arbitration Act, with regard to all questions arising as to legal points in the settlement of the affairs of the Albert Life Assurance Company, has lately given his decision in the suit of "Partridge v. the Directors of the Albert Assurance Company," which bill, it will be remembered, was repudiated by the Vice-Chancellor. The present bill was filed against the directors of the company in their individual capacity for an alleged fraudulent report of the value of shares in the company before the winding-up. The arbitration was held in the old offices of the company in Waterloo-place, when Mr. Gill appeared for the plaintiffs; Mr. Jessel, Q.C., and Mr. Graham Hastings for the defendant Whitworth (one of the directors); Mr. Kekewich for the other directors. Lord Cairns, having heard the arguments in support of the bill, without calling upon the other side, dismissed the bill with costs.—Lord Cairns on Friday gave two important decisions in this case. The proposal of the reconstruction committee was open to many objections, among others that if the ordinary creditors, other than the policy-holders, were to be paid immediately, the best assets would be obtained by them, while the more speculative assets would probably be set aside for the policy-holders; it would also be unfair to defer payment to policy-holders who did not come in under the scheme. On inquiries being made of twenty-nine companies, it was found that none would undertake a transfer of the business, but that five would negotiate as to managing the business as agents. On the whole, Lord Cairns reluctantly determined that he must put aside altogether any idea of reconstruction or reconstitution. As regarded disputes with shareholders, in Lancaster's case the mode of ascertaining the amount of proof on policies current at the time of the winding-up was determined. Bell's case, which was decided by the Court of Chancery, was overruled on the ground that certain arguments had not then been brought before the Court. It was laid down by Lord Cairns that a policy must be valued without any reference to the health, &c., of the policy-holders—there must be a pure premium valuation as at the date of the winding-up, the rate of interest being taken at four per cent., and the tables to be used being those of the seventeen offices. The present value of the sum insured by the policy, and that of the future premiums that would have been payable, are to be taken, and the difference between the two is to be the value of the policy. As to annuities current at the time of winding-up, the value at that time is to be determined from the tables of each particular company without any reference to persons holding them.

PERSIA.—The famine in Persia is still pressing with the greatest severity upon the mass of the population. Cities and whole districts have been deserted by those physically able to do so. The remainder starve. Relief measures are being organised in India.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MONDAY, July 17.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—The adjourned debate was resumed by Lord ABINGER, who supported the amendment, although, as an army officer on full-pay, he should be benefited in a pecuniary sense by the Bill. He declared that the officers of the army, both of purchase and non-purchase corps, wished matters to remain as they were, and, after examining the Bill as it affected promotion and exchanges, expressed himself favourably—both personally and on behalf of the great body of officers—in regard to Mr. Muntz's proposal to pay officers at once the regulation prices, leaving over-regulation payments to take care of themselves. The Duke of Richmond had, he thought, underrated the cost of the Government scheme, which would be, not £700,000, but £1,150,000 a-year. Referring to instances within his own experience of the desire of British officers to improve themselves professionally, and the obstacles thrown in their way by the War-office, he examined the short service by the light of his Crimean experience, and pointed out the value of well-seasoned troops in a campaign.—Lord LUCAN, as an army officer, regarded it as his duty to stand by the system of purchase, which he defended upon various considerations.—Lord STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE said that all were agreed upon the necessity of reorganising our army and increasing its efficiency; but, regarding the Bill as altogether inadequate to the emergency, he should vote for the amendment.—The Duke of ARGYLL began by noticing some of the points raised by Lord Russell, and next referred to the arguments in defence of purchase which formed the staple of the speeches of noble lords opposite, although they all declared that it was indefensible in theory. Defining purchase to be a system of promotion by seniority, qualified by money, and wholly irrespective of comparative merit, he adduced the fact that from £8,000,000 to £10,000,000 was invested by five thousand officers in proof of the impossibility of touching the army system without coming into contact with purchase and the vested interests involved. Passing next to the injurious effect of purchase upon army education, he said that, although its defenders admitted it had its blots, purchase must stand or fall as a whole, and unless it could be maintained before a more critical assembly than that described by Lord Derby, its apologists must resign their pet scheme. What, then, was the use of fighting for a system which must be given up the moment the Government of the day declared against it? He next called attention to the form of the amendment, which was intentionally evasive on the subject of purchase, and complained that the Duke of Richmond did not treat with fairness the Government plan as developed by Lord Northbrook. He described the mode of selection by the Commander-in-Chief and the Secretary for India, and asked why a system of selection apart from politics should not answer for colonelcies of regiments which succeeded in high military commands. Lastly, he objected to the amendment as an unconstitutional infringement of the prerogatives of the Crown, because it asked their lordships to refuse to pass a Bill for the reorganisation of the army until the Crown had embodied the details in the form of a Bill. This the Government did not intend to do, and if their lordships' example were followed by the other House, their lordships would be the first to complain.—Lord SALISBURY declined to discuss the question upon the sole ground of the interest of the British officer. Dismissing with contempt the allegation that if their lordships adopted this amendment, the next Bill might not provide for the payment of over-regulation payments, he pointedly alluded to Lord Derby's description of the constituencies, as indicating that he was not quite satisfied with his own work in the late Reform Bill. Declining, however, to believe that the new constituencies were prepared to rejoice over the spoliation of rich men, he declared that, whatever statements had been made to the contrary notwithstanding, the officers of the army were opposed to this Bill, and were anxious that it should not pass. It was possible that if we were all thrown upon a desert island, purchase might not be set up as an institution, and he was not quite sure the Duke of Argyll himself would be an institution that would be set up under such circumstances. Denying that purchase was the issue upon which they were going into the lobby, he said that purchase did provide a system of retirement, and that he and those about him had a right to ask how those objects were to be accomplished if it were abolished. Passing in caustic review the relations between the Ministerial leaders and their followers in the other House, he hinted at the improbability that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would go on throwing away £1,000,000 a-year on military retirement. Party influence was the blot of the political system of the United States, and this was also the great danger of our political future. If purchase had been described as a system of seniority tempered by selection, the more correct formula of the proposed system was stagnation tempered by jobbery. It was the especial duty of that House to protect the country against rash and imperfect legislation, and he exhorted their lordships not to abandon the army to the influence of combined senility and corruption.—Lord GRANVILLE regarded the speech just delivered as illustrating how far one of the ablest members of their Lordships' House could push sarcasm and invective. Replying generally upon the whole debate he stated authoritatively that, although the Government would not be unmindful of economy, the War-office would with all speed apply itself to enforce the plan laid before the House and the country in this debate. If the Government desired a mere party triumph they could not wish for a more favourable state of things than to appear to be engaged in a struggle, in which they were certain to be victorious, to prevent the removal of an abuse which was supposed to be connected with the class interest of that House. But, owing as he did more than perhaps any one else to their Lordships' House, he besought them to pause and to remember the position held by that House during the Conservative leadership of the late Duke of Wellington and Lord Derby respectively. The policy of the Duke was to avoid collision as much as possible with the other House, while all the victories won under the late Lord Derby were sterile, and the present division would certainly come under this category. —Their lordships then divided, when there appeared for the second reading—contents, 130; not contents, 155. The Duke of Richmond's amendment was then put as a substantive motion, and agreed to without a division.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, July 17.—THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACTS.—In reply to Mr. BAINES, Mr. BRUCE said the report of the Royal Commission would be in the hands of hon. members in a few days. He might state that two-thirds of the members of the Commission were in favour of a qualified compulsory application of the Acts; one-third—seven at least—were for strengthening rather than weakening the Acts; and six were practically in favour of repealing all compulsory legislation on the subject; but all were in favour of some modified legislation applicable to the whole country. It appeared to the Government that it would be impossible, looking to the state of public business, to introduce a Bill founded on the report in the present session. The commissioners reported that the police were not chargeable with any abuse of their authority; but, on the contrary, that they performed their duty with moderation and caution.

ARMY RECRUITING.—In answer to Colonel SYKES, Captain VIVIAN said the "actual cost" of a recruit cannot be given. No separate record of the cost of a recruit, as distinguished from a trained man, has ever been kept in the army. It is not and cannot be known in the army accounts when a man passes from the status of a recruit to that of a trained soldier. Added to which, recruits and trained soldiers occupy the same barracks and consume the same stores, and are under the same superintendence, so that the cost of these items is divided between the two classes, and can never be anything but "estimated."

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY, July 20.—ABOLITION OF PURCHASE. —Lord GRANVILLE made a similar statement to one which had been just previously announced by the Prime Minister in the other House with respect to the abolition of purchase. He recapitulated the reasons which had induced the Government, after the adoption of the Duke of Richmond's amendment, to advise her Majesty to sign a Royal Warrant cancelling the regulation prices of purchase. Their lordships, in agreeing to the amendment, had evidently been influenced by an unwillingness to agree to the abolition of purchase, but purchase having now been abolished by constitutional means, and their lordships being freed from any responsibility, he trusted they would consent to proceed with the Army Regulation Bill, the second reading of which would be moved by Lord Northbrook at an early day. They might amend one of the clauses, so as to make it appear that the responsibility of purchase abolition rested with the Government and the other House, but he hoped the lordships would take a calm and conciliatory view of the question in the interests of the officers concerned.—The Duke of RICHMOND said their Lordships, by adopting his amendment, had declared their unwillingness to consider the abolition of purchase until the Government had brought in a more complete and comprehensive scheme of army regulation. Although purchase had been abolished by Royal Warrant, the Government had brought in no scheme, and therefore the position of affairs remained unaltered. Having been taken by surprise, he reserved free liberty of action when the Government proposed to proceed with a Bill containing the same provisions, and only omitting purchase, which their Lordships had already condemned as insufficient.—After a few words from Lord FEVERSHAM, protesting against the course taken by the Government, Lord GRANVILLE stated, in answer to Lord MELVILLE, that officers would have the same security for compensation as was enjoyed by the Civil Service for pensions, and that to place these payments on the Consolidated Fund would be to cast a doubt upon other payments now provided annually by the Estimates. A copy of the Royal Warrant would be laid on the table.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, July 20.—THE ARMY BILL.— Mr. GLADSTONE stated the course the Government has decided to take in order to meet the vote of the House of Lords on the Army Bill. The information was given in answer to Sir GEORGE GREY, who asked whether the violation of the law in the payment of over-regulation prices was to be prohibited; and, after narrating what had happened in the Lords, Mr. Gladstone pointed out that it did not amount to a rejection of the Bill, but simply to a postponement of the second reading until certain information had been laid before them, and that it was open to any peer to move the second reading. Next he reminded the House that by statute there was no purchase but what was permitted by the Queen's regulations, but that the intervention of the House would be required to find a pecuniary indemnity for the officers affected. Though the Government would never have thought it reasonably within their competence to take any vital step without consulting the House, having now got its definitive judgment against purchase, and having before them the declaration of the Royal Commission that over-regulation could not be got rid of except by abolishing purchase altogether, the Government had advised her Majesty to cancel the warrant under which purchase is legal. This advice her Majesty had been graciously pleased to accept, a new warrant had been framed, and, therefore, said Mr. Gladstone, amid loud cheering, "after the 1st of November next purchase will cease to exist." After defending this resolution as consistent with constitutional usage, and best calculated to put an end to a state of suspense dangerous to the discipline of the army, he went on to comment on what the House of Lords might be expected to do in this altered state of circumstances. In the hope that they would be disposed to go on with the remaining clauses, a sufficient time for consideration would be allowed, but he declined at present to say what the Government would do if they failed to prosecute the Bill to its legitimate end. But, come what might, they would use all the means in their power to obtain just and liberal terms for the officers.—Mr. DISRAELI complained that so supremely important an announcement should be made in answer to a prearranged question, and moved the adjournment of the House to give the opportunity for raising a discussion. Recalling the history of the Bill, he maintained that it had not been sent up to the Lords with any overpowering expression of feeling in its favour, and vigorously denounced the resolution of the Government to set the House of Lords at defiance, and to overrule their vote by an exercise of the prerogative. It was a very violent course, if not an illegal one, and if the difficulty could be got over so speedily, why, he asked, had not the Government taken that course six months ago? In that way the paralysis of the session would have been avoided, and the House would not have been deprived of the opportunity of controlling supply and discussing important public questions, such as the loss of the Captain, the Washington Treaty, &c. A wise and patriotic Minister would have sought some less dangerous means of getting over his conflict with Parliament than by appealing to the prerogative of the Crown.—Lord ELCHO having interposed with a question whether the House would have any opportunity of considering what he described as a coup d'etat—Mr. GLADSTONE replied to Mr. DISRAELI, remarking that, if, after all the opportnnity he had enjoyed for preparing his attack, he had no more serious objections to offer, the Government need not be much afraid of his criticisms. He denied that there was any resort to prerogative; the Executive was simply exercising a power conferred on it by statute; and as to a conflict with Parliament, they were supported by the deliberate judgment of the House of Commons, and the House of Lords had not actually declined to abolish purchase. Mr. Disraeli, having once burnt his fingers by premature declarations on the reform question, had been careful not to commit himself in favour of purchase, so that he might not be hampered if he happened to come into office. He did not deny that this was an inferior mode of dealing with the question, and the Government had proceeded by Bill in the first instance because that was the only means of giving the officers a statutory claim to compensation and of providing the over-regulation prices. In answer to Lord Elcho, he suggested that if he wanted a discussion he should move a vote of censure.— Mr. CARDWELL argued that it was incumbent on the Government to deal at once with the violation of the law in the payment of over-regulation prices, and this could not be done without abolishing purchase altogether. He repeated Mr. Gladstone's argument that the Government was exercising statutory powers, not resorting to prerogative, and stated that the new warrant would at once be laid on the table.—Mr. HORSMAN regretted the astounding announcement just made by the Premier. In the present discreditable state of public business it would have been wiser to take a conciliatory line, and to establish courteous relations with the other side, instead of adopting a mode of cutting the Gordian knot which would inflame ill-feeling and provoke animosity. Mr. Horsman traced the history of the Bill to show that it had been unpopular with the Liberal party, and that when it was cut in two the majority would have preferred to go on with the Ballot Bill. In fact, the resolution of the Lords corresponded almost exactly with the original idea of the Government. Prerogative, Mr. Horsman said, was the will of the Minister, and, with a steady majority behind him, there would be nothing to preuent him from becoming a dictator.—The conversation was brought to a close by Mr. CARDWELL promising, in answer to Mr. Whalley and Sir S. Northcote, that the warrant should be laid on the table.

HOUSE OF LORDS, FRIDAY, July 21.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—Lord ORMATHWAITE asked whether the Army Bill would be reprinted, the portions to which their lordships' concurrence was not invited being removed; to which Lord GRANVILLE said that that could not be done at this stage.—The Royal Warrant abolishing

Purchase was laid on the table by Lord NORTHBROOK.—The business which was merely routine having been disposed of, the Duke of RICHMOND gave notice that on the second reading of the Army Bill he should move, "That the House, in assenting to the second reading, desires to express an opinion that the interposition of the Executive during the progress of the measure, in order to attain, by the exercise of prerogative, without the aid of Parliament, the principal object of that measure, is calculated to depreciate and neutralise the action of the Legislature, and is strongly to be condemned; and the House only assents to the second reading in order to secure compensation to officers on the abolition of purchase."—There was some discussion as to the day on which the second reading should be moved, and at last Lord GRANVILLE acceded to the Duke of RICHMOND'S request that it should be Monday week.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, July 21.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—At the morning sitting Mr. CARDWELL laid on the table the Royal Warrant cancelling the Regulations for the Sale and Purchase of Commissions; and Mr. HORSMAN gave notice that, if the Bill for compensating officers came again before the House, he should move that the funds be raised by loan instead of by annual vote of Parliament.

NAUTICAL INCIDENTS.

The cargo of the Koningin Augusta, Pritzkow, from Java to Falmouth, which put into Simon's Bay, May 21, leaky, &c., consisted of sugar, of which 4,000 bags had been thrown overboard, 12,000 were sold at Simon's Bay, and the remainder, 10,000 bags, would probably also be sold there. The vessel would have to be made tight and provided with new masts. The repairs were expected to be effected in the course of three or four weeks.

The str. Shiraz, from Bombay and Carwar to Liverpool, lost the blades of her propeller 300 miles E. of Malta; she had docked at Malta to fit a spare propeller, and was to leave that port on July 18 for Liverpool.

The Bacton Castle, of and from Shields for Aden, with coals, took fire aft at 1.30, July 18, but was got under. She was towed ashore under Shakespeare Cliff, Dover.

The Golden Fleece, Bray, from Boston to Bombay, with ice, &c., reported by cable as on fire at Halifax, U.S., put in there July 5, with fire in the lower hold. The next day engines were employed in an unsuccessful attempt to extinguish the fire, and it was thought that it might become necessary to scuttle the vessel.

The Arcturus (s.), which arrived in the river from Calcutta July 17, experienced a dense fog from off Vigo to Dungeness.

The Climinar, of Liverpool, Williams, sailed from Sunderland on Oct. 5 last, with coals from Rangoon, was off Portland on Oct. 11, was spoken in soundings (by a steamer which arrived from the Brazils at Havre, Oct. 19), and has not since been heard of.

In the case of Newspapers, Books, &c., the prepayment of the postage is compulsory. Parcels must not in any case exceed 5 lbs. in weight, or be of greater dimensions than twenty-four inches in length, and twelve inches in width or depth.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

Messrs. Jay Cooke, M'Culloch, and Co.'s New York "Weekly Circular," with Mail dates to July 5, and Cable despatches to July 19, says:—

"Business in all branches is usually dull at this season, and the current year presents no exception to this rule. The record of the fiscal year just closed, however, shows that the foreign commerce of the country has materially exceeded all precedent. The value of goods imported into the whole United States is about 490,000,000 dols., while the value of the exports of merchandise and produce may be estimated at 425,000,000 dols. in currency values. The monthly statement of the Public Debt just issued shows a reduction in the net indebtedness of the Government of 93,327,765 dols. during the fiscal year, and a decrease during the past month of 7,103,350 dols. Wall-street markets present a firmer tone, though with limited transactions. In the gold market there is a moderate speculative movement, induced by free exports of specie. Money still keeps very easy, rates at call being about 3 per cent. Foreign exchange is a shade easier, quotations being about ½ lower for prime bills. As usual, after the payment of the July dividends, United States Bonds are in very active demand, and have steadily advanced on our last quotations. To-day, upon a rumour that the Government has made arrangements for marketing a considerable amount of the New Five per Cents. in Europe, accompanied with a free demand for bonds for German bankers, the market has been especially active, and prices have advanced fully ½ per cent"

VETERINARY SURGEON.—On the recommendation of the principal veterinary surgeon, it is notified for general information that the veterinary surgeons attached to batteries of Royal Artillery, ordered to move in relief by G. O. C. C. of 22nd of May, 1871, will remain at their present stations.

GRATUITIES TO PUBLIC SERVANTS.—Resolution.—The Governor general in Council desires that the several officers of account in the civil, military, and public works departments, will, wherever it is observed that a person, who has previously received a gratuity for being thrown out of employ, has been re-admitted into the service of Government, issue to him a notice calling his attention to the notification of this department, No. 3,047, dated September 8, 1869, and informing him that he must refund the gratuity at once if he wishes to have the service, for which he received the gratuity, counted for pension. The refund may be made in monthly instalments not less than the amount received, divided by the number of months that have passed since it was received, and also not less than one-third of the pay drawn in the new office. The right to count the service for pension will not be deemed to have accrued until the last instalment is paid. Non-receipt of this particular notice will not be held to excuse non-observance of the order of September 8, 1869.

India-Office, 7th July, 1871.

BY ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

FOUR YOUNG MEN will be SELECTED in NOVEMBER next to be TRAINED and EDUCATED for the FOREST SERVICE of INDIA.

The course of Training and Instruction in Forestry and Cognate Sciences in France or Germany lasts for two years and a-half, previous to the departure of the Students for India at the end of 1874, and the Secretary of State will contribute, at the rate of £50 half-yearly, towards the Expenses of the Training of such Candidates as are favourably reported on by their Instructors. In addition to this, some weeks must be passed under a Forester in Scotland.

The Salary will be at first £300 a-year, and the Salaries of the Appointments in the three Presidencies range between that sum and £1,900 a-year.

Applicants must be British subjects, above Seventeen and under Twenty-three Years of Age, and unmarried.

Persons intending to become Candidates should at once apply for the particulars of these Appointments to the Assistant Secretary, Revenue Department, India Office, Westminster, as the Testimonials and Certificates required must be sent to the India Office before the 14th of October next.

HERMAN MERIVALE.

A GENTLEMAN desires a RETURN PASSAGE for his ENGLISH NURSE to Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, or Burmah. Highest references.

Address Capt. BYRON, H.M.'s 10th Foot, Uckington, near Cheltenham.

A LADY is desirous of obtaining Service for her NURSE, with any Lady with or without Children, returning to Bombay in October next. The Nurse is going out to be married, and, therefore, only asks for her Passage to be Paid. She can be highly recommended as a thoroughly respectable and trustworthy Nurse. She is a fair sailor.

For further particulars apply to A. B., Post-office, Runton, Norfolk.

THE WIFE of a Beneficed Clergyman, residing in a healthy neighbourhood by the Sea Side, would be glad to TAKE CHARGE of TWO or THREE Orphan or Indian CHILDREN. Terms moderate. Good references given and required. The climate of Scilly is exceedingly mild and agreeable, and well adapted for delicate children.

Apply to Mrs. J. H. W., St. Mary's Parsonage, Isles of Scilly, Cornwall.

THE WIDOW of a distinguished Officer in the Queen's Service, residing in Devonshire, WISHES to have CHARGE of ONE or more LITTLE CHILDREN whose Parents are abroad. They would have watchful attention and a comfortable home. References exchanged.

Answers to be addressed care of Messrs. Cox and Co., Craig's-court, Charing-cross, London.

EDUCATION.—THE GROVE, CLAPHAM COMMON.

The Misses WINTERBOTTOM RECEIVE a limited number of YOUNG LADIES for BOARD and EDUCATION, on the following Terms:—

For Pupils under Twelve Years of Age, Thirty Guineas per annum.

For Pupils above Twelve Years of Age, Thirty-five Guineas per annum.

The Course of Study comprehends the English and French Languages, Ancient and Modern History, Writing and Arithmetic, Geography, &c.

Professors of established reputation attend for Languages, Music, Drawing, and various accomplishments. Their Fees are at the usual rates.

The Year is divided into Three Terms, as follows:—

The Winter Term—commencing January 25th, and ending April 18th.

The Spring Term—commencing May 1st, and ending July 20th.

The Autumn Term—commencing September 1st, and ending December 18th.

EDUCATION.—STUBBINGTON HOUSE, FAREHAM, near SOUTHAMPTON, Hants. Established 1841.

The Sons of Gentlemen resident in India or the Colonies are received for Modern Education, and Prepared for the Royal Naval and Military Examinations, the Civil Service, Indian Civil Service, Telegraph, Woods and Forests, Engineering College, Direct Commissions, the Universities, and Public Schools. Stubbington House is situated in park-like grounds, in the country, close to the sea, and Pupils are received on landing at Southampton.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to Mr. FOSTER.

N.B.—Pupils can remain the Vacations.

INDIAN LANGUAGES. — INSTRUCTIONS given on exceedingly Moderate Terms in SANSKRIT, Arabic, Hindustani, Bengali, and Persian, by the Rev. G. SMALL, M.A., long Missionary in Bengal and the N.W. Provinces of India (Author of "Hand Book of Sanskrit Literature," &c.), 24, Wellington-street, Strand.

TO OFFICERS and Others proceeding Abroad and Leaving their Children in England.—A Lady, the Wife of an Officer, residing in a charming and healthy locality on the Coast of Devon, is desirous of TAKING PARENTAL CARE of TWO or THREE CHILDREN. The house stands in its own grounds, which are extensively cultivated, overlooking the Sea. The children would have the society of her daughters, who are accomplished young ladies, and it would be found an excellent opportunity for placing the children in a Home where their morals and culture would be strictly attended to with that degree of kindness and affection which could only be met with under their parents' protection. The highest references must be given.

Address "MATER," Post-office, Charing-cross, London.

TO PARENTS and GUARDIANS.—The VICAR of a Parish, a few miles from Hastings, on the South-Eastern Railway, wishes to meet with a LITTLE GIRL, about Ten Years of Age, to EDUCATE with his only Daughter. A First-class Governess in attendance, by whom Italian, French, and Music is taught. The greatest care and attention would be paid, and the comfort of home promised. Two Sisters would be taken, if required.

For terms and particulars, address the Rev. M. A., 26, Gordon-street, Gordon-square, W.C.

INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, CIVIL SERVICE, ENGINEER, TELEGRAPH, WOODS and FORESTS, WOOLWICH, and LIVE.

The Rev. Dr. HUGHES (Wrangler Joh. Col. Cam.), who has had nearly twenty years' experience in Preparing for the above Examinations, and can offer abundant references, RECEIVES a very FEW PUPILS into his family. The highest class assistance. Large house and grounds.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.

PLEASURE TO THE HEALTHY.—Unless the appetite be fair and the digestion in good order, our spirits droop, our energies fail, and our bodies soon become enfeebled. Holloway's remedies relieve at once a disordered stomach, and restore the digestive organs without severe dietetic restraint to perfect health and vigour. The Ointment should be rubbed twice a-day over the pit of the stomach and upon the right side, that it may stimulate and regulate the liver. The Pills act as gentle aperients, purify the blood, and cool the system. They subdue irritation, and remove all obstructions. In dropsy, and diseases of the kidneys, immense success has attended the diligent use of Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

MESSRS. GABRIEL'S

Extraordinary Improvements in ARTIFICIAL TEETH and PAINLESS DENTISTRY, Patent No. 562, improved Jan., 1871, afford the following advantages:—

1stly. EXTREME LIGHTNESS, combined with efficiency, durability, and comfort.

2ndly. MODERATE CHARGES, accounted for by their extreme simplicity of construction, while the highest class of mechanism and materials only are employed.

3rdly. So successful an imitation of nature (springs being entirely dispensed with) that detection becomes an impossibility.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, July 4; Agra and Madras, July 2; Calcutta, July 1.

THE Friend of India appears to have made a slight jumble between pounds and rupees when it talked about Sir S. Fitzgerald's having sent to the India Office a bill for furniture to the tune of £45,000. It appears that the whole cost of furnishing the new Government House at Poona was only £8,500, of which £5,000 was sanctioned in February 1867, under the government of Sir Bartle Frere. This sum however, failing to cover the necessary outlay on carpets and chandeliers, a further payment of £3,500 has since been sanctioned, for which alone Sir S. Fitzgerald can be held responsible. We should like to know also whereabouts at home exists that "feeling" which, according to our contemporary, "is said to be so strong that Sir Seymour Fitzgerald runs some risk of being recalled." If any such danger really loomed in sight Sir Seymour might be tempted to act on the principle that it was better to be hanged for stealing a sheep than a lamb.

WE are sorry to hear that cholera has broken out in Berhampore, and that one of its first victims was Dr. John White, the Civil Surgeon. It appears however that the disease has not yet taken an epidemic form. From the Madras side we learn that Trimulgherry, which through timely precautions had escaped the doom that lately fell on Secunderabad, has at length been visited by the same scourge. At Bolarum also, five miles from Secunderabad, the cholera has appeared, just as the 18th Hussars have gone back to their old cantonments. At Trimulgherry, where two British regiments and several batteries of artillery are quartered, the scourge has hitherto confined itself to the artillery; but in a small native village between Trimulgherry and Bolarum a great many deaths have taken place. It is much to be hoped that this new outbreak will not extend to Secunderabad, where the 18th Hussars are again quartered in barracks which have always had the credit of being the unhealthiest in the station. They are very old, they lie in a hollow, are ill-drained and ill-ventilated, and "their well-water is supposed to be the worst in the cantonment." The Hussars will indeed be unlucky if the plague they have endured so much to get rid of should again beset them. On the first outbreak they were promptly marched away under canvas, the men in the day-time sitting with wet towels round their heads to guard them from sunstroke. Still the cholera followed them into camp, and it was not till their camp had been repeatedly shifted and forty-five men, women, and children, had perished, that they shook off the enemy which now once more threatens to invade them.

IT is worth noting that the former freedom of Trimulgherry from cholera was due to its careful isolation from the plague centre at Secunderabad, only a mile and a-half distant. The station was placed under strict quarantine; large quantities of unripe fruit were destroyed in the bazaars by order of the Cantonment Magistrate; carts coming in from the country were stopped, and everything in short was done to avert the mischief which has since so unexpectedly gone to work there. Certain it is that no cholera appeared in this station till after the quarantine had been withdrawn. Another incident bearing on the same subject is reported from the Hussar camp. One day a violent dust-storm raged among the tents, and from that date the disease perceptibly abated. Dust-storms in India cool and clear the air; but we must leave the doctors to determine what influence they may have in checking cholera.

WE observe that Major Champain, R.E., has been appointed Director in Chief of the Indo-European Telegraph Service, in the place of Colonel Goldsmid who has resigned. If the change was inevitable no better substitute could have been found for the late Director than his erewhile Assistant. In this connection we may notice the contradiction given last Saturday through the Times to an absurd report that the severity of the famine in Teheran had driven the telegraph people away from their work into the hills. They have gone to the hills for their usual summer retreat, but the telegraph wires have been taken with them, so that business cannot have been interrupted through any act of theirs.

WE are sorry to hear that Colonel Mowbray Thompson, one of the four survivors of the Massacre of Cawnpore, has been ordered to send in his papers, on account we suppose of the recent squabble between him and a turbulent junior at Debrooghur. It appears that he will receive a pension of £200 a-year in consideration of what he went through in 1857, but to an old officer in shattered health with a wife and six children such a compassionate allowance must seem like slow starvation.

IT appears from a recent telegram that the heavy rains in Bengal have done much damage to the indigo crop.

ACCORDING to latest telegrams Ameer Khan and four other Wahabee prisoners have been found guilty of plotting a jahad against the Indian Government, and condemned to imprisonment for life by the High Court of Patna.

THE writer of a letter which appeared in the Times of Wednesday last draws attention to the probable source of the recent cholera outbreak at Secunderabad, where his own regiment was quartered in 1865. The barracks in which they were lodged enjoyed so evil a repute for unhealthiness, lying as they did so near an old graveyard, that he had grave misgivings as to the purity of the well-water used by his men. Some of it was accordingly analysed at Madras, and found to be so full of organic matter as to be quite unfit for drinking. It use was at once discontinued by the writer's order; but his remembrance of that incident leads him to ask whether the well in question may not have been used by the 18th Hussars, especially as the epidemic has been confined to the men who alone would have drunk of that water. If his suspicions are well grounded, and the latest news from India leaves no doubt on this point, the true cause of the recent epidemic may almost be taken for granted. Little as we yet know about the generation of cholera, all recent inquiries into that important subject tend to show that one mode of disseminating the disease lies in the drinking of water into which cholera excretions have somehow been filtered. On this point Dr. Diver's experience, as lately imparted to the readers of the Times, confirms that of most medical witnesses both here and in India. Twelve years of Indian service have convinced him that the cholera poison, which exists in the patient's discharges, is "propagated and diffused through air and water." It may filter through the ground into some neighbouring well, or after drying up under a tropical sun it may be blown away as "cholera dust," or it may be washed into the wells by high tides and heavy rains. In support of these conclusions he tells us that the new supply of Vehar water has diminished cholera in the Island of Bombay. A similar result is said by Dr. Macnamara to have issued from the completion of the waterworks in Calcutta. The same experience holds good of our English towns and cities. With proper sewerage and an ample supply of pure water the fight against cholera, when it comes upon us, as in all likelihood it soon will, can be maintained with a fair prospect of success. But everything of course depends on the extent of our precautions against the threatened invader. If a few builders, house-owners, and directors of water companies could only be hanged by way of encouragement to the rest, we should have little reason to fear for the result. In a free country like ours however it is a comfort to feel that nobody is ever held directly responsible for the poisoning of his neighbours through defective drainage and intermittent water supplies.

We understand that the Indian Civil Engineering College is to be opened on Saturday, August 5, by the Secretary of State for India and the members of his Council.

There is every chance it seems, of an early reform in the organisation of the Royal Artillery. During the last twelve years or so the brigade system which superseded the old battalion system has been tried and found more and more wanting for all purposes of practical convenience. In India especially, where batteries are continually moved a long way from their brigade head-quarters, the new system has always proved a cumbrous and costly failure. In future, if we are not misinformed, the unit of artillery organisation will consist, not of a brigade or group of batteries, but of the single battery with its six guns and two hundred men, commanded by its own field-officer; such a force being held practically equal, for controlling purposes, to a battalion of the line. Promotion would then go in the battery instead of the brigade, and the constant shifting of officers from one battery to another would cease to endanger the efficiency of all. Promotion, which has lately stagnated to an indescribable extent, will also be quickened by the establishment of a seconded list, while fresh appointments will be thrown open to artillery officers by the expected formation of Volunteer Districts under a staff selected from the Artillery.

Whether the appointment of Mr. Robertson as harbour engineer for India was the selection of the right man for the right place or no is more than we can pretend to determine. But that his withdrawal from active work on the Madras coast at the setting in of the hot weather has given birth to loud remonstrances in India is a fact which cannot be denied. It also seems that the cry first raised against him by the Madras Chamber of Commerce has been taken up by the Governor of Ceylon himself; and we have now before us ocular evidence of the dissatisfaction which Mr. Robertson's retreat to a cooler climate has caused in the mind of an officer of the old Indian Navy, who once played a leading part in the history of the Indian surveys. Captain Taylor, writing last week to a contemporary, justifies the complaints made by the Madras merchants by asking "who told Mr. Robertson that, at the period of his visit, these Malabar coast rivers were at their worst state?" He goes on to assert that "no nautical man conversant with the stormy period of that coast, could have made a statement so opposed to facts. Many a talented Madras engineer has tried his hand at, but failed, in any improvement of these bar-harbours; the terrific violence of the south-west monsoon has obliterated his tentative works in less than a fortnight." The experience of harbour engineers in Europe has "never yet had to grapple with an antagonist of such power and endurance as the Indian monsoon surf." In two months' time Mr. Robertson would have seen what that surf could do at Colombo and in the Pamban Channel. In the Gulf of Manaar it rolls its worst during June, while on the Malabar coast it keeps rolling in "on end" throughout June, July, and August. That is the time when Cochin is least approachable, and that is just the time which Mr. Robertson has chosen for drawing up at his leisure in England reports which, if all these witnesses speak truth, must prove little better worth than waste paper. It is possible of course that he may have his answer; but apart from Captain Taylor's assurances to the contrary, we are certainly puzzled to see how a fair-weather visit to harbours on an open coast can enable any one to speak with authority on the condition of those harbours in the very height of a protracted monsoon.

Mohsin Khan, the Persian Minister, in a letter to the Times of to-day, flatly contradicts the alarming stories which have reached England of a terrible famine in Persia. There has been and is no famine anywhere in Persia, only a dearth for some time in the country near the Persian Gulf, where the nomad tribes, being disappointed of their usual crops, have crowded into the towns, and been fed at the cost of the Persian Government. The prices of grain have fallen sensibly between the 1st June and the 22nd July, and will fall yet lower in view of the rich harvest expected this year. As for cholera in Teheran or elsewhere, there is no more than the usual amount of it at a season when fruit is largely and rashly consumed. "With regard to the plague, what is said is a lie"—a short and, let us hope, a convincing answer to the "imaginative newsmongers" elsewhere shown up in the same letter.

Mr. C. Clarke's report on the Calcutta Botanic Gardens gives some interesting details as to the result of late experiments in growing various kinds of useful plants. The attempts at growing the finer sorts of cotton appear to have been a failure; two biggahs and a half of Egyptian cotton yielding only ten chittaks or about twenty ounces, while only two and a half chittaks were produced from a hundred plants of Sea Island Cotton. The failure was owing chiefly to frequent rains at the wrong time. "Just as the plants were coming into fine bearing, a rain would come, split all the ripening bolls, and throw the plants anew into vigorous vegetative growth." With the appearance of fresh young bolls another shower would pour down and spoil them. It is therefore inferred that the climate of Calcutta is "too moist for these perennial cottons," and fit only for the Indian annuals which ripen quickly. Probably better results might be obtained somewhere about Chota Nagpore, where climate and elevation stand midway between the excessive moisture of Calcutta and the dryness of the Berar table-lands. Major C. Clarke's hybrid seedlings have not been more fortunate, their distinctive characters vanishing under cultivation. Mr. Scott however, nothing daunted, intends to try new experiments with those kinds of cotton which "come true." The attempts at growing ipecacuanha have likewise failed in Calcutta, but there is reason to hope that this valuable plant may in the course of time be raised successfully at the foot of the Himalayas. Coco again is a plant which fails to thrive in Calcutta, but might answer well enough on the Bhamun Pookree spur below Punkabari at the foot of the Himalayas, about four hundred feet above the sea level. Better luck is reported with the tobacco grown last year, which yielded above ten pounds of seed of the finest kinds.

Mr. Clarke is doubtful whether the Bun-Rheea or wild Rheea plant would be easier to raise or would yield a richer crop than the ordinary Rheea, even if it grew wild in Bengal. But under the popular name of Bun-Rheea many kinds of nettles grow in Northern and Eastern Bengal, which yield a fibre even superior to that of Rheea itself. The Villebrunea appendiculata, which is used by the natives of Lower Sikkhim for bowstrings, has a remarkable strong fibre, finer and whiter than the ordinary Rhea. It is easier to clean and prepare for the English market than any other as yet tried, and it likewise seems easier to grow. Another strong fibre is the Maoutia puya, of which the Lepchas weave their cloth. It has also been found "excellent for boot-laces." Villebrunea frutescens is another promising plant which may challenge rivalry with its namesake aforesaid. From the Debregeasia longifolia many of the Assamese tribes spin their cloth, but about its productive powers as compared with some other of the fibre-yielding plants Mr. Clarke has his doubts. Bœhmeria cuspidata is also recommended for trial on account of its size and fertility. Among the stinging-nettles Mr. Clarke mentions only the Girardinia heterophylla, whose fibre is used by the Mlechas for bow-strings. The sample of cleaned fibre however which he saw, appeared to him "better fitted for rope-yarn than for the adulteration of silk." Besides the greater coarseness of their fibres, the stinging nettles are, as one might imagine, most disagreeable to work up. In spite of every precaution, a head-gardener who turned out a good deal of fibre from "the abominable Laportea crenulata," suffered for twenty-four hours from a violent swelling of the limbs and extremities.

If it be good to "see ourselves as ithers see us," we ought to be much obliged to Sambhu Chandra Mukhopadhyaya for his printed criticisms on the character of Prince Alfred's reception in India. The Hindu gentleman in question laughs us to scorn for our utter incapacity for getting up pageants, as shown throughout the Prince's visit to Calcutta. There were hardly any troops visible, the procession was an atrocious failure, the Prince was received in the dark, and the illuminations betrayed not one spark of originality or grace. There was nothing but a monotonous round of "V. R.," "Welcome," "God save the Queen," "God save the Duke," and "Welcome to our Sailor Prince." At the fancy ball very few natives were present, and the costumes were nearly all Western. It is admitted, however, that the investiture and the reviews formed a splendid exception to the general dulness and want of invention. On the whole, our Indian critic with the lengthy name does little more than re-echo the complaints which æsthetic Britons bring against their own countrymen. Our taste in pageantry has certainly not improved since the days of the Tudors and first Stuarts, and our wit of late years has grown decidedly stale. But, after all, it is not by pageantry that we have governed India, nor have the natives of India ever shown much practical connection between æsthetic insight and a turn for government. 'Tis true, 'tis pity; but somehow the two faculties have not often coexisted to any great degree in nations of historic note.

A new attraction has just been offered to sightseers at the Crystal Palace, in the shape of a new court within the Tropical Department, containing a number of curious and interesting memorials of Mr. Forsyth's journey to Yarkand. The things shown have been kindly lent by Mr. Forsyth and Dr. Cayley, sometime our active Agent at Ladakh. There is a painting of the Buddhist Monastery at Ladakh, taken by Mr. Fenton from Dr. Cayley's drawings. Some figures of Tibetans and Yarkandis illustrate the dress worn by natives of the countries in question. A group of Tibetan Lamas or priests, dressed for official duty, is well represented in a photograph taken by a native for Dr. Cayley. Among other curious appliances are some leather straps used for whipping the bold women who dare to show themselves in Yarkand without their veils. All kinds of wearing apparel, including boots and shoes, cloaks of various textures and patterns, veils of finely wrought silver, besides head-ornaments largely wrought with turquoise, and various ornaments in jade are also shown. Among the holy or religious articles are censers, bells, rosaries, and bottles for holy water, which suggest some original connection between Christian and Buddhist ceremonies, and that masterpiece of priestly invention, the prayer-wheel, which does for the devout-minded what a hand-organ may be said to do for the musical—not those poor morbid beings who go frantic at the first notes of a street-organ, but the healthy if not too fastidious lovers of sweet sounds. Besides these outward mementoes of a little known region, a good deal of useful and curious information may be obtained within the court regarding the manners and customs of two countries in which the most distinctive features of Islam and Buddhism are sharply contrasted.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE INDIAN SERVICES, &c., REPORTED SINCE LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s Forces.—Capt. Wm. A. C. S. Menteth, late 81st and 106th regts., at Bayswater, aged 29, July 25.

Bengal.—Dr. J. White, civil surgeon of Berhampore, of cholera. Lieut. S. Fulton, R.A., at Mussoorie, June 26. Major and local lieut. col. Mosse, H.M.'s 6th regt., and director-general of gymnastics in India, at Lucknow, June 14. Surg. major Wm. H. B. Ross, Indian Army, at Brighton, July 19.

PASSENGERS EXPECTED AT SOUTHAMPTON.

Per str. Candia, Aug. 5.—From Bombay.—Mr. Runnington, Lieut. the Hon. F. Gifford, Qrmr. H. Nelson, Mr. E. Roeckell, Mr. Oxford.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"T.'s" letter next week.

All Letters for insertion in Allen's Indian Mail should be legibly written on one side of the paper only, and accompanied with the real name and address of the writer, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith. Anonymous letters will not be inserted. The columns of the Indian Mail are open for free, but temperate discussion on all Indian topics of public interest, and especially all matters regarding the Services, Civil, Military, or Uncovenanted. The Proprietors and Editor wish it to be distinctly understood that they do not hold themselves in any way responsible for the opinions that may be expressed in the Correspondence Columns.

Communications for the Editor, and Advertisements, should be sent under cover to Messrs. W. H. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

INDIAN SURVEYS.—III.

Under Colonel Thuillier, of the Bengal Artillery, a body which has furnished some of the ablest scientific workers in India, the progress of the Revenue and Topographical Surveys has kept pace with the growing wealth of scientific means and appliances. As Waugh's deputy, Colonel Thuillier had done much to improve and develop the system of field-surveys from 1847 to 1861, the year when he became Surveyor-General. In some parts of India his working parties have been measuring out from 15,000 to 20,000 square miles a year, in spite of the usual drawbacks of difficult ground or unhealthy climate, varied sometimes by the hindrances which native prejudice and mistrust placed in their way. In measuring the Native States for instance they had to forbear from using the customary chain. One zealous officer, Mr. Mulheran, perished from hard work and disease in the Nirmul jungles, "a most pestilential tract on the Warda and Godavery rivers." Saxton, Murray, Depree, Godwin Austen, did good service in their respective fields. Seven parties have been at work for the last two seasons among the arid wastes of Rajpootana, the unexplored jungles of the Central Provinces, and the wild mountain tracts of Khasiah and Jynteah, where 600 inches of rain fall yearly. In Central India they came upon a tract laid utterly waste by a tigress which had killed fifty people and rendered thirteen villages uninhabitable. Altogether seventeen parties were at work in 1868-9. One of these, under Colonel Johnstone, mapped out 400 square miles of country theretofore unknown in the neighbourhood of the Black Mountain, working in the wake of the Hazara Field-Force "among glaciers and mountains of perpetual snow." Among other things they discovered the true course of the Indus between Astor and the Black Mountain. In Luckimpoor Lieutenant Barron had to cut his way through dense jungles with imported labour, at considerable damage to his own health. From 1847 to 1869 the Topographical Survey has covered an area of 97,028 and the Revenue Survey of 400,162 square miles, at a total cost of £1,502,865, which appears to include the outlay on map-printing, lithography, and photozincography. It is only within the last few years that natives who can read English have been properly trained to draw and write on stone. Thanks to Mr. Hennessey, the art of photozincography has enabled the Office to turn out many thousands of fairly accurate maps in a wonderfully short space of time.

One of the many illustrative maps bound in with Mr. Mark-

ham's Memoir shows how much progress has been made with the revenue and topographical surveys on a scale of one mile to the inch. Blank spaces however are still left for the greater part of Madras, for half Bombay, for nearly all the Punjab and North-Western Provinces, and for the whole of British Burmah. Of this remainder much has actually been surveyed, but either the work has been hastily done, as in the North-West Provinces, where it must be done over again, or else the maps remain for the present incomplete. According to Mr. Markham, the mistake of adopting the khusrah system of field measurements by a native ameen is about to be repeated in the North-West, although it is well-known that any attempt to use the old skeleton maps of those provinces for any engineering or other useful purpose would end in utter failure. In Bombay the great lines of railway, with some exceptions, "exist on the maps solely by guess-work," for want of a due connection between the field surveys and their proper base, the Great Trigonometrical Survey.

No small part of the results attained by Indian Surveyors is due to the nicety of the instruments employed. The factory which Everest established in Calcutta, under Mr. Barrow, was for some time ably supervised by Barrow's successor, Sayad Mohsin, a native of Arcot, who "would have taken a leading place even among European instrument-makers." Of late years the task of selecting instruments of the finer sort has been skilfully discharged by Colonel Strange at the Lambeth Observatory. Zealous in the cause of science and intolerant of finality, he has widened the field and enhanced the value of his labours by abolishing the pattern system and competition for prices.

During the last fifteen years geological research has been fostered by the direct action of the Indian Government. Before that period indeed a long succession of geologists had thrown much light on the physical history of many parts of India, and as far back as 1818 Dr. Voysey had been appointed Surgeon and Geologist to Colonel Lambton's survey. Dangerfield, Franklin, Sleeman, Nicolls, with Drs. Spilsbury and Adam, the Revs. S. Hislop and R. Everest, were among the earliest volunteers in the field of Indian Geology. Several of the leading Surveyors, such as Waugh, Everest, Cautley, Baker, and Durand, did good work in this direction upon their own account. Mr. James Prinsep's versatile genius helped him to discover fossil bones in the Jumna and Nerbudda Valleys. In 1845 Mr. Williams, Geological Surveyor to the Company, first thoroughly explored the Ranigunj coal-field, a few years after the Nerbudda coal-fields had been examined by Colonel Ouseley. The researches of Drs. Falconer and Royle, of Colonels Cautley, Baker, and Durand, shed a rich stream of light on the geology and botany of the Sewalik Hills, which cover as it were the approaches to the loftier Himalayas. Colonel Strachey pushed his researches into the Himalayas themselves, Captain H. Strachey examined Western Tibet, Dr. Thomson studied the geology of Ladakh, Dr. Gerard and Captain Hutton reported on the fossils in the Spiti Valley, Dr. Malcolmson died in the midst of his labours among the fossils of the great basaltic region in Central India, and Colonel Sykes enlightened the Geological Society on the trap formation of the Deccan. A great deal of geologic ground in Southern India was covered by Captain Newbold, an accomplished antiquary and Persian scholar, who especially studied the laterite formation that extends from Bombay with hardly a break to Cape Comorin. In the list of explorers in the same field we note the names of Dr. Christie, Lieutenant Aytoun, Colonel Meadows Taylor, Captain Grant, Drs. Fleming, Buist, R. Thompson, and Carter, and Sir Bartle Frere, who all busied themselves with the geology of Western India. It was not however till 1856 that a regular staff of geological surveyors was organised for Government work under Lord Canning, with Dr. Oldham for its head. Since then the work of exploration has been carried vigorously forward by Dr Oldham and his fellow-labourers, such as Professor Medlicott, Dr. Hooker, Messrs. Blanford, Mallet, Theobald, King, Foote, and other able men, over a large part of the Indian Peninsula. The coal-beds of Bengal and Central India, the alluvial deposits of the Ganges Valley, the limestone rocks of the Vindhyan group, the nummulitic rocks of the Punjab, the metamorphic rocks of the Himalayas, the chalk beds of South Arcot, the quartz limestone and slate of Kuddapah, Nellore, and Kurnool, the sandstone, shale, and nummulites of British Burmah, the coal and lead ores of Chutteesgurgh, the metamorphic hills north of Guzerat, have all been carefully examined by competent surveyors. Major Lucie Smith discovered the Chandah coalfields in 1866. Traces of the "stone age" have been disinterred in the country north of Madras city, in the Jherria coal field, in Burmah, and several other districts. On the whole an area about four times as large as Great Britain has already been explored, under difficulties so serious that out of two dozen surveyors one third have died or been disabled by ill-health.

Since the formation of the Asiatic Society at Calcutta in 1784, under the presidency of Sir W. Jones, Indian archæology has found a succession of eager and accomplished students among our countrymen dwelling in India. Jones, Colebrooke, Colin Mackenzie, Horace Wilson, Walter Elliot, James Prinsep, and others of little less note opened out a rich field of study, whose importance has of late years been recognised by the Indian Government. Sir W. Jones first revealed the identity of King Chandragupta with the Sandracottus who concluded a treaty with Sileucus Nikator. Beejapore, "the Palmyra of the Dakhan," was carefully examined in 1811 by Captain Sydenham. Mr. Erskine described the cave of Elephanta in 1813. Daniell, the artist, with his nephew's help, gave accurate drawings of many famous buildings in various parts of India about the beginning of this century. To James Prinsep belongs the special glory of having first deciphered the inscriptions on the Buddhist pillars of King Asoka at Delhi and Allahabad. Among the ablest of his helpmates was Major M. Kittoe, who turned out some more of Asoka's inscriptions in Cuttack, and explored the architectural remains of Sarnath, near Benares. In the Punjab several Buddhist "topes" were opened between 1830 and 1834 by Runjeet Singh's generals, Ventura and Court. Worn out by hard study, Prinsep died at home in 1840; but his bright example has not been in vain. Postans, Taylor, and Wilson in Bombay, Cunningham and Maisey in Northern India, Walter Elliot in Madras, carried forward the work which Mr. James Fergusson, a name of world-wide repute, has since been encouraged by the Indian Government to mould into definite and coherent shape.

Mr. Fergusson began his researches into Indian architecture as far back as 1829. In the course of the next thirteen years he had examined almost every building worth studying in India, from the rock-hewn temples in the South to the marvels of Moorish art in the North-West. The results of these labours and of similar researches conducted with the same object by Cunningham, Maisey, Elliot, Taylor, Dr. Wilson, Hall, Kittoe, Gill, Burgess, and other zealous explorers, have been embodied in many valuable records from different pens, and digested to good purpose by Mr. Fergusson himself in his comprehensive and thoughtful "History of Architecture." To his counsels we owe much of the renewed attention which the India Office is now paying to the discovery and preservation of India's archæologic treasures, from the cairns and cromlechs of prehistoric times to the later developments of Hindu, Jain, and Mohammedan architecture. For the post of director-general of archæological surveys no fitter choice could have been made than that of General Cunningham, the old friend of James Prinsep, and a scholar of established repute, when in 1861 Lord Canning picked him out for the post to which in 1870 he returned with greatly enlarged powers. His researches into Buddhist and Hindu monuments at Sarnath, Gaya, Muttra, Delhi, and elsewhere, his successful attempt to track the footsteps of Alexander in the Punjab, and the new facts he gleaned concerning the inscriptions of Asoka, the Buddhist Constantine, are a few of the services rendered by him to the cause which has once again been entrusted to his charge. Before his return to India a younger explorer, Lieutenant Cole, R.E., had got through his difficult task of obtaining a complete cast of one of the great stone gateways in the Sanchi Tope. The fruits of his success our readers may have already seen for themselves in the western gallery of the International Exhibition. Photography, that invaluable handmaid of all art and science, has already been turned to good account in India. Mr. Cole has photographed the temples of Cashmere, Captain Lyon the architectural remains in many parts of Southern India, Mr. Sykes the caves and temples around Nassik on the Bombay side; while many good photographs and drawings have already been obtained from Rajpootana, the Central Provinces, the Berars, Nepal, and Sikkhim. A pretty broad field of study still lies open to our countrymen in India, a field of whose richness few Englishmen at home have any conception. Let us hope that no unwise economy will again check the progress of researches which cannot, as in England, be left entirely to the care of private explorers. Native co-operation has indeed begun to employ itself in this field, notably in aid of the splendid volume edited by Mr. Fergusson on the architecture of Beejapore. But native help is still a sorry staff to lean upon if India's archæologic treasures are to be rescued betimes from unmerited oblivion.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.

The Bombay Gazette has little doubt that one result of the Finance committee's inquiry will be a recommendation that the cultivation of the poppy shall be thrown open, and that the State shall content itself with levying a heavy excise duty on the drug in Bengal as it does now in Bombay. The change would cause no loss to the revenue if energetic efforts were made to repress the smuggling which is now so common; and Government need have no compunction about putting down with a strong hand illicit trade in an article which, so far from being like salt a necessary of life which people must get a supply of by fair means or foul, is positively hurtful to the health and morals of the community. No Government can prevent a people from using stimulants; but it can at least check their use and relieve industrious and intemperate citizens from part of the burden of taxation by laying the heaviest duties on luxuries consumed chiefly by the idle and the wealthy. It is undeniable that the present connection of the State with the cultivation of opium has a demoralising effect on the Government as well as the people. Very large quantities of opium are now consumed in India itself, especially in the provinces beyond the Ganges, in which the population is more akin to the Chinese than the Indians in race and habits of life; and it is not pleasant to know that officials in those provinces may be looked askance at by their superiors at Government head-quarters, and be supposed to be wanting in zeal to advance the interests of the State, if they do not succeed in forcing so much opium down the people's throats. Nothing can be worse than that an Indian officer should be compelled to degrade himself by filling his treasury out of the profits of a traffic which in his inmost heart he must hold to be accursed. Collecting a duty on the drug is quite a different affair; and men may do that work cheerfully enough who now justly feel it to be a serious grievance that they should become responsible for the success of a Government speculation in opium. There is another point, well worthy of consideration, which we have not yet seen brought out in the discussions about the opium revenue. The Government loses character by having its name mixed up with the rumours that influence speculation in the opium market. This season, for instance, has been remarkably fruitful in reports that have already materially increased the profits of the State on the opium sales. Sir Richard Temple's estimate of the average price at which Bengal opium would be sold in the financial year 1871-2 was fixed as low as Rs. 1,075, so that, on the three sales for April, May, and June, he has secured a surplus of over a quarter of a million. But Government is roundly accused of having secured most of this gain by means of the very simple process of rigging the market. We all know in Bombay how, whenever the fortunes of cotton seem desperate, there comes a mysterious rumour, too often contradicted a week afterwards, that something has gone wrong with the American crop, which will consequently be short of the previous year's by a million bales or so. In like manner the news spread in Calcutta last month, before the fifth sale of opium took place, that there was a short crop this year. Intending purchasers became excited, and prices went up Rs. 100 a chest, putting Rs. 430,000 in the pocket of the Government beyond the amount realised at the fourth sale of the year. A similar rumour gained currency before the sixth sale, and once more prices went up Rs. 100, with a result which must be very soothing to the feelings of the Finance Minister. But the policy of allowing such speculations is doubtful. Prices have fallen again since the sixth sale, because the rise in Calcutta had been greater than was warranted by the scale of prices in China; and it is clear that in the long run high prices must check consumption and encourage the Chinese to cultivate opium largely at home. Sir R. Temple should beware, as the Minister of a trading Government, of sacrificing the future of the drug in which he deals for the sake of snatching immoderate present gains. We do not, of course, share the suspicion that the Government has had anything to do with putting in circulation the rumours which caused the recent rise in prices. But it is their interest and their duty to discourage speculation in opium, and to keep the prices from month to month as even as possible; and they can do this to a great extent by formally announcing what number of chests of Behar and Benares opium they intend to sell during the year. It will be a good thing for India when the rise and fall in the prices of opium ceases to concern the Government directly at all; but, until the State can dissociate itself from a traffic which it ought not to touch, speculation should be kept down, or the opium revenue will become more uncertain and precarious than ever.

A LOCAL ARMY FOR INDIA.

The Bombay Gazette thinks there can be very little doubt that public opinion at home is gradually veering round in favour of the reconstitution of a local army for Indian service. The time must come, and that before many years have passed away, when the advantages of having an entirely separate army for Indian service will be formally recognised by the English people. Military men in England have already, in fact, taken alarm at the possible consequences of encouraging the older soldiers of the home army to volunteer for India. It is often urged by good judges that, whatever may be said in favour of short service, on the ground that it tempts better men into the ranks, its tendency is to weaken the efficiency of the army by giving us regiments composed exclusively of young soldiers. This tendency will, of course, be greatly strengthened by the adoption of Mr. Cardwell's plan of enticing trained men of more than one year's service to go to India. But we are sure the English people will not allow the home Army to be destroyed in order that the Indian Army may be kept in excellent order. The probable effect, then, of any of the changes in military service which have lately been discussed in England will be to restore to India the local European Army, of which the costly blunder of amalgamation deprived her ten years ago. On the score of economy alone, it is extremely desirable that India should revert, in this manner, to the practice of the years before the mutiny. It must be allowed that soldiering is a much more scientific and expensive business now than it was in the days of the East India Company, and that therefore the cost of training recruits is necessarily much higher. But this allowance goes a very little way towards explaining the fact that "the Company were able to send efficient artillery and infantry recruits to India at a cost of £26. 7s. 5d. a man, instead of £136. 13s. 11d. for cavalry, and £63. 8s. 5d. for infantry recruits as now proposed." The difference is so monstrous that India may well long to have her own army back again, and to buy once more the services of the English soldiers she requires at the fair market price for such labour.

The Uncovenanted Service.—There is no doubt that the Indian Uncovenanted Service needs considerable modification before it is in a condition satisfactory either to the service or to the country, but the important points that the service has in view may be considerably damaged by injudicious handling. The Times of May 26 contains a letter, a column and half long, on the grievances of the Uncovenanted Service; and an exceedingly able letter it is, and putting some of the questions at issue in about as clear and concise a way as they could be put; but the writer knows more of India than of England when he writes of thirty years' service being required to earn a pension of £500 a-year. The British people as a whole have no conception of what those thirty years' service involve, of the labour that is required at the offset to qualify a man for his work, of the climate, the family penalties, and much besides that must be experienced to be known. If the House of Commons had to decide upon a service with that one feature, we fear the decision would go against the Uncovenanted interest.—Friend of India.

An Historical Parallel.—The wrongs to which the last Abyssinian embassy has been subjected, and the mistakes which led to the late war, remind us that misfortune seems for a long time to have pertinaciously beset the efforts of this obscure kingdom to establish relations with the outer world. In the time of Aurangzeb, the King of Abyssinia despatched an embassy to the Court of Delhi. Ivory, zebras, slaves, and civet were the presents which they carried to propitiate the Great Mogul. But destiny as usual was bent upon their discomfiture. First the zebras and the greater part of the slaves died; then Sivaji stripped them of everything but the skin of one of the former, the empty horn which once had contained the civet, and the ugliest of the slaves. When at last they reached Delhi, they were so destitute that they could not afford to bribe the courtiers to procure them that audience which their condition scarcely seemed to claim for them; and it was only through the influence of Bernier, who was then in high honour at Court, that they were admitted to the Royal presence.—Englishman.

JUGGERNAUT.

"What is the inward part or thing signified" in the festival of Juggernaut? On Monday night last people began to put up huts, much in the way that they do at an English fair, over an extent of about a couple of miles at Serampore; and, as the shades of evening began to fall, ladies and gentlemen sat in front of their tent doors, or hut doors, looking forward to the business of the coming day. We had the pleasure of visiting the temple of Radhabullub in the company of a gentleman, who in a very grave way asked three or four young priests, in charge of the temple, how much money they expected to get next day. One of them, evidently a wag in his way, said fifteen hundred rupees; and then he laughed, as if he was tickled at the fun of the whole thing—our reverend friend's question and everything concerned. One of the company present suggested that perhaps the reverend gentleman who put the question wanted to share the proceeds, at which the sharp-witted young priest laughed till his sides shook again. It was all very good natured, and for our part, instead of feeling grave at the enormity of this dreadful festival, we felt much as we would on visiting an English fair-ground the day or night before the fair. Poor folk! would anybody grudge them the pleasure of their annual Mela? Perhaps it is not refined, perhaps not very enlightened; but they evidently enjoyed it, as they sat, and laughed, and chatted, at their tent doors. Well, next day was the festival, and, to prepare for it, the magistrate of Serampore proclaimed by tom-tom that no gharies were to be seen on the road, and that, as the day was likely to be broiling hot, everybody who intended to see the Juggernaut car in motion was to walk. The rare fun of the thing was seen when one was compelled to turn from under cover. The delightfully direct sun came down in all its glory, and it was delicious to the last degree. Many a poor European sight-seer, we believe, breathed blessings on Tuesday last on the head of the magistrate of Serampore. For two miles it was one vast scene of—what shall we call it? Enjoyment? Yes, we do not doubt it in the least—enjoyment, too, of a kind that we have no right to interfere with, for it was as staid and respectable and decorous as an Exeter Hall meeting. Nobody ran against anybody else intentionally, no rude boys jostled the women, as they do in the High-street, Islington, London. The women, tired as many of them seemed, carried big babies some of whom could have walked as well as their mothers, and evidently carried them without a murmur. Low, debasing, brutalising? Very likely, but we saw nothing of the kind. A remarkable phase of human nature, resting on old traditions in the sacred books, extending back through the mists of ages, and yet containing about as little of the sacred and the solemn as it is easy to conceive of a festival. Of course, one might be shocked at the Juggernaut Car; it is proper and respectable, and we are really sorry that after trying our very best we could not be shocked. We tried hard, looked as gruff as possible, tried to feel sour; but the sight of those wee lads and lasses, growing up to something, of those men and women, happy in their way for a day or two, drove all the grimness and gravity away. One thing alone we missed of the attractions of an English fair, and we mention it as a hint to our Hindoo Friends of the greatness and comfort that awaits them when they can once arrive at this one point of perfection. We regret to say that over the long two miles of road, with quiet bye-roads here and there, striking off and peopled, there was not one grog-shop, not one tent licensed to sell foreign and British spirits, wholesale and retail. Strange to say, too, over the whole line of road we did not see one person "the worse for liquor." Of course they were about to pull the Juggernaut Car, the ropes were on the road two inches in diameter, the wooden horses were on the Car, ready to start when the human horses began to pull; the priests, too, were on the car itself, laughing and joking; and maybe, if the police were not there, some poor human being would drop "accidentally" under the car wheels, and then have no more to say about Juggernaut or anything else for evermore. But, if Sir Wilfrid Lawson had been there, he would have told us that the Juggernaut of the Hindoos had no terrors at all to be compared with our own Juggernaut, whose wheels pass over thousands of poor people every year. What was done after dark we don't know, but in all soberness and sincerity we saw nothing at all to make so much noise about in the pulling of Juggernaut's Car. What Juggernaut thinks of it himself we dare not even guess, but if it can bring one smile to his extraordinarily ugly face the festival has done sufficient for the preparation of one year. We are sorry to joke about such things, but we cannot help it. It was pleasant to see those poor sad faces lit up ever so slightly, and,—bother it!—one wished that Juggernaut might endure, until something else took its place as a basis for a Mela that would weave itself, as this hath woven itself, into the lives and habits of the poor people of Bengal.—Friend of India.

Miscellaneous.

Sindhia.—The Maharajah Sindhia left Gwalior on the morning of the 26th for Agra, en route to Allahabad, for the purpose of bathing in the Ganges during the eclipse of the moon on the 2nd inst. On the 3rd July his Highness will proceed to Bombay to visit his Excellency Sir Seymour Fitzgerald. The Maharajah will be accompanied by Colonel Hutchinson, the Political Agent.

Central Provinces.—It is rumoured that the Officiating Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces has applied for a considerable reinforcement to the covenanted ranks of the commission. It is said that the application (if actually made and sanctioned) will have the effect of withdrawing from twelve to twenty civilians from the overcrowded cadres of the North-West.

Bengal Pilot Service.—The question of finally abolishing the Covenanted Bengal Pilot Service is, the Calcutta Examiner hears, under the consideration of Government. It is not at all improbable that it will be decided in the affirmative, and the remaining members of the service granted pensions in proportion to the various periods they have served.

Railways.—The designs and estimates for the Wurdah and Wurrora Coal-field Railway have received the preliminary sanction of the Government of India, and the formal sanction of the Secretary of State to the project may be expected shortly. It is probable that actual work will commence next October. This line is fifty miles in length; it will involve the construction of several important works, such as the Wunna, the Potra, and the Ambea river bridges.

Public Works.—The public may be interested to know what it cost on a late occasion to fumigate the barracks at Moradabad. "The exact sum," says the Pioneer, "was Rs. 1,176-13-6! The Military Department refused to pay the bill, and after some wanderings it was sent to the Sanitary Commissioner for 'any remarks he might desire to offer.' This official remarked that he thought twenty bonfires per diem kept continually alight for thirty-nine days was perhaps unnecessarily cautious, and that 146 men per diem to look after the bonfires was perhaps unnecessarily liberal."

The Sorgo Plant.—Major Boddam has lately submitted to the Agri-Horticultural Society of India a paper on the Northern Chinese sugar cane (sorghum sacharatum), known in America and France as "sorgo," pointing out its value as a forage plant for dry and wet cultivation. Where grass yields a ton to a ton and a-half of hay, sorgo will yield from two to nine tons of dry fodder, containing, according to a report of the United States Agricultural Department, "a greater amount of nutritious matter than can be obtained at the same time and at the same price from anything else."

A Coolie Killed by an Inspector.—A very tragical occurrence has taken place at Fyzabad. Several coolies were at work in the railway line, under an European inspector by name Burke. The inspector was giving sundry directions, when, for some reason or other, he got angry with a coolie, and threw a brick-bat at him, which struck him on the temple. The poor man died next morning. The body was sent for examination to the Sub-Assistant Surgeon, the Civil Surgeon being absent from the station. A post mortem was duly held, and the Sub-Assistant Surgeon gave it as his opinion that the deceased had died from the effects of injuries received on the brain.—Lucknow Times.

Drowned in the Hooghly.—We (Englishman) regret to have to report the death, by drowning, of Mr. H. Hodge, an inspector at the Goraie bridge works. Mr. Hodge was walking along the parapet of the bridge, which is about three feet wide, and seventy feet from the water. Whilst so employed, his hat was blown off by the breeze; in trying to save it he lost his balance and fell into the river. He was not observed to rise to the service, and, we fear, there is little hope now of recovering his body. This sad occurrence took place about a mile and a half below the spot where the late lamented Bishop Cotton lost his life. The deceased inspector was highly respected by all who knew him.

The Bengal Cess Bill.—The Hindoo Patriot, we see, publishes a portion of a very liberally-conceived and outspoken minute by Mr. Buckland, the Commissioner of Burdwan, on the Cess Bill. The writer is of opinion that the Bill, in its present form, fails to carry out the wishes of the Secretary of State, in not committing the task of assessment as well as that of disbursement of the funds to the local bodies. He would not only remedy this, but "go a step rather in advance of what has hitherto been done in India," and "have a sort of election of the non-official members of the committee" by the zemindars, all payers of income-tax, vakeels, and professional men. The reason given by Mr. Buckland for not, as a member of the committee, recording his opinion against the Bill, illustrates in a striking manner the working of our Legislative Councils. He was dissuaded from doing so, he says, by Mr. Schalch, "because he thought that our official position had made it necessary that we should obey the orders conveyed to us by the late Lieutenant-Governor." Are we to infer that the late Lieutenant-Governor ordered his subordinates to support the Bill? We are surprised, and not surprised, that so important a minute as this should not have been published by the Government.—Englishman.

A Native Blunder.—The Pioneer relates the following:—"A distillery having been established at a certain station in the N. W. P. not long ago, the tehsildar in charge of the Zillah was informed that a man was to be sent down to take over charge in a few days, also two chuprasees to assist him, and that a thermometer and hydrometer would be issued shortly for the purpose of testing the liquor as it was distilled. After a little the tehsildar duly acknowleged the arrival of the head man and his chuprassees, but reported that the two sweepers had not yet arrived. He was written to, to know what sweepers he alluded to, and promptly replied, quoting the names as they appeared in his instructions, Thermo and Hydro?—Thermometer and Hydro-meter!!! Se non vero, e ben trovato.

Inventions.—The following specifications of inventions have been filed in the Government Secretariat of the North-Western Provinces:—"Improved Self-acting Apparatus for Watering Tatties," by Edwin Drew, Assistant-surgeon, Royal Artillery, residing at Mhow. "Improved Means of Cooling the Air in Carriages or Vehicles Employed for the Conveyance of Passengers or Freight in Tropical Climates," by R. F. Fairlie, Engineer, of the Victoria Chambers, in the City of Westminster, England. "Improvements in Obtaining Motive Power by Means of Air and Steam and in Apparatus Employed Thereon," by G. Warsop, Engineer, of No. 9, Burton-street, Nottingham, England.

The Russians in Bokhara.—The Russians are reported to be at Khoolum, in Bokhara, where everything would appear to be quiet. The Khan is said to be deprived of all power, and to be under the control of the Russian authorities, who make him a certain monthly allowance. The Russians have a force of about 1,000 men in Bokhara, the administration of which is carried on by an envoy from St. Petersburg; the people are not satisfied with the change of Government, and long to have the Khan ruling over them again. The trade of Khoolum has thrived well under the new rule, and the merchants are in every way pleased with the treatment they receive, and the encouragement given to them in the prosecution of their calling.—Sindian.

A Cry for an Expedition against the Loshais.—As regards the expedition against the Loshais it is thought that Lord Napier of Magdala's apprehensions "stop the way." If there are imperial reasons why an expedition beyond the north-eastern frontier should not be undertaken this year, well and good; but no mere dread of incurring the responsibility of having urged measures certain to prove costly should prevent the expedition being undertaken. Putting aside the good policy of teaching the tribes a lesson they would not forget, the rescue of the British subjects held in captivity by them should make the despatch of a force to scour their districts a point of honour with the Government of India. It has been estimated that, from the Chittagong districts alone, no less than fifteen hundred native subjects of England are held in captivity by the tribes!—Calcutta Examiner.

Second Battalions for Native Corps.—We were certain that His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief would not have allowed the commands of the 6th, 23rd, and 35th regiments of Native Infantry to remain so long vacant unless very special reasons existed for the delay. We now hear that a project is before the authorities to increase the number of officers and men in native corps by the addition of second battalions, with one permanent commandant. We are not at present in a position to enter into details, but any scheme which will tend to do away with the present system of officers doing general duty at stations, and in place thereof post them to the different regiments of the native army already so under-officered, will be a move in the right direction. Although there may be fewer commands to distribute amongst the higher grades, the efficiency and general good of the service will be increased by the change.—Englishman.

Lord Mayo's Successor.—The Simla correspondent of the Pioneer, writing on June 24, says:—I heard to-day, as a piece of gup, from one whose gup is well worth listening to, that our old acquaintance Lord Sandhurst is already talked of in the clubs within the parish of St. James as the probable successor to Lord Mayo. It is hardly pleasant yet to think of Lord Mayo having a successor; but I suppose such a thing must happen some day, and if it is to happen, we may just as well speculate as to the fortunate individual. Lord Sandhurst will prove a better Governor-General than Commander-in-Chief I doubt not, but that a man who so "little seeks to find the way to heaven by doing deeds of hospitality" will never be a popular one may be affirmed with certainty. Besides, "he is too disputable for me," others "think of as many matters, but give Heaven thanks and make no boast of them." Pity the Councillors of the ennobled Mansfield! was my reflection when I heard the piece of gossip.

Equipment of Cavalry Soldiers.—"M." writes thus to the Pioneer on the above subject:—I see that the English Government is going to dress the cavalry in trousers and long boots. It appears to me that a cavalry soldier should always be so dressed that if his horse is disabled he may still be an available unit on foot. No man can walk well in riding boots; he is certain to get footsore and fatigued. The best dress for anyone who usually rides, but may be occasionally compelled to walk, consists of cord breeches, gaiters of the same stuff, and strong-laced walking boots. He will have a better seat in the saddle than trousers can afford, and he is thoroughly effective on foot. If he gets into the mud and wet, the gaiters are easily dried. As one who spends a considerable portion of his life either in the saddle or plodding across country in riding dress on foot, I feel competent to speak, though I am not a soldier. A life-guardsman in uniform dismounted in an Indian jheel or among shifting sand would be as helpless as a swan on ice.

Scientific.—Dr. Oldham has reported very favourably on some specimens of galena sent to him for analysis by the collector of Bhagalpore. The discovery was first made some years ago by some Coles who were digging for iron ore on a hill in the zemindaree of Rajae Lilanand Singh, in the Pergunnah Sabran; but the Rajah, after making some enquiries, took the ore for surma, and gave up all project of digging further for it. According to the analysis, the ore contained about 14 per cent. of sulphur, and 86 per cent. of lead, and, judging from the specimens sent, should yield 52oz. 8dwts. 14grs. of siver to the ton. As under the improved processes of reduction at present in use, ore containing only two ounces of silver per ton can be worked at a profit, Dr. Oldham considers these specimens as "unusually rich and valuable." The collector states that a gentleman to whom the ore was shown has expressed a desire to take steps to work the mine, but thinks that an officer had better first be sent to examine and report upon it.

Cinchona in Sikkim.—Mr. W. G. McIvor, superintendent of the Cinchona plantations of the Bengal Government in British Sikkim, in a lengthy report on the subject says, that these quinine plantations are situated in the valley of Rungbee on the Himalayas, about thirteen miles from Darjeeling. This valley opens on the plains to the south-east, is entirely sheltered by surrounding hills, and its general appearance is marked by indications of a locality possessing every requirement for the successful growth of Cinchona. The natural forest-trees are overgrown with moss, and the undergrowth is ferns. The climate is very moist, especially in the higher portions where the ridges attract the clouds, and an almost perpetual drizzle or mist prevails, except during two months of the year, when the weather is comparatively fine with occasional showers. The report says that the plantations in British Sikkim, both public and private, are, as a whole, in an unsatisfactory condition. They are exceedingly patchy and irregular, not one third of the extent of land under cultivation having produced plants of fair growth, while large patches exist in which the plants have died out altogether. There are, however, here and there a few fine patches, and some exceptional plants have made extraordinary vertical growth, much exceeding that on the Neilghiris; but even these plants have not the luxuriant foliage which characterise the plants of Southern India. The whole of the plants which Mr. McIvor saw in British Sikkim are sparsely leaved and long jointed, and have attained little more than half the circumference of stem, which plants of the same height have on the Neilghiris. All species seem to thrive on good land for one or two years after being permanently planted out, and the calisaya and succirubra for three years; at this age it appears that the disease begins to make rapid progress among the red bark plants. The plants upon rich deep bamboo land flourish, and in some parts attain four years' growth before they have become seriously affected with canker. Mr. McIvor says that the cost at which Cinchona bark can be grown in British Sikkim cannot at present be estimated with any degree of certainty. Trees of equal height do not produce so much bark as in the South of India. This arises from the more slender growth and thinner bark of the plants in British Sikkim. Three selected red bark trees above the average of the best on the Rishap plantation gave 6 seers or 12 lbs. of fresh bark. Only the stem and best branch bark was taken. The yield of dry bark being about 3¼ lbs. These trees were nearly four years old when cut down.

IMPORTS.—Calcutta, July 1.—Our market has been much quieter during the past week. Importers are now willing sellers at last quotations, but dealers' offers are under these, though they have in no case been accepted so far. Stocks in the bazaar and in the interior are still light, but the demand at this season is usually slack. All kinds of Grey Goods and Bleached Goods are quiet, and no change of importance has taken place in values. Twist: Lower offers are now going, though they have not yet been accepted. Turkey Red continues very depressed; fancy colours are unchanged.

EXPORTS.—Calcutta, July 1.—Saltpetre: The demand during the week for European shipment has continued steady, and for the best descriptions there has again been a slight advance in prices; prices for the lower qualities remain unchanged, but the market closes firm. Rice: There is no change to report in the rates for the best white, the demand for which has been moderate. Holders still stand out for full rates for Ballam, but there has been little business transacted. Linseed: The demand both for Europe and America continues steady, and the lower rates of freight are likely to lead to increased shipments. Rapeseed: Owing to the small supplies and the failure of the crop in the North-West, prices have continued firm; yellow, which is very scarce, is slightly higher. News from Europe being more favourable, there has been a slightly better tone in the market, though no actual rise in prices has taken place. About 100 bales were sold during the week by private contract, and 87 bales at public auction at rates quoted last week. Corahs: We only hear of one small transaction of 300 pieces at Rs. 160, holders still standing out for too high rates.

Advances to Sepoy Regiments.—The Commander-in-Chief of Madras has, the Madras Mail learns, moved the local Government to take into early consideration the question of advances to sepoy regiments embarking for foreign service, &c. His Excellency, it is believed, admits the anomalies of the existing regulations, and is strongly in favour of their modification in conformity with the dictates of common-sense.

Literary.—The Rev. Mr. Percival and Mr. V. Kristnama Charry of Madras have undertaken to compile a new Tamil Anthology for the use of schools. Several Tamil scholars, including the gentlemen who have undertaken to make the compilation, will read works and mark passages which seem likely to answer for insertion in the Anthology; these passages will then be examined by Messrs. Percival and Kristnama Charry, and, if approved, will be distributed into three parts, ascending in order of difficulty. According to this plan the Poetical Anthology by Dr. Pope will not be kept in its present state, neither will a separate Minor Anthology be prepared, as suggested by Dr. Caldwell. It appears that the verses in Dr. Pope's anthology are arranged under certain heads, and that his work, instead of rising gradually from the easy to the difficult, has difficult lines near the beginning and easy ones near the end. The Anthology also contains some hundred verses of the Minor Poets. It is, therefore, considered necessary to recast the whole.

The Schoolmistress Abroad.—The following appears in a Madras paper of Friday, June 30. "Notice.—At the request of certain native gentlemen, a highly-educated and respectable Hindu caste lady will deliver a lecture on Female Education, at the premises, door No. 33, Mint-street, Black Town, Madras, 6 P.M., this day (July 1)."

Cholera at Trimulgherry.—We (Madras Times) hear from Secundrabad, under date the 26th June, that cholera had appeared among the Artillery stationed at Trimulgherry. One fatal case is reported. The disease was also spreading to Bolarum. The weather was described as unseasonable; strong south-westerly winds, and no rain. The 18th Hussars had returned to cantonments.

Police.—The Madras Commissioner of Police is likely to prove rather an expensive officer to Government. Lately Rs. 3,000 were paid for him as damages for an illegal arrest, and we now see that another action is being heard in the High Court, in which damages are laid at Rs. 5,000, for the illegal arrest of a native, his wife, and two children.—Bombay Gazette.

A Rascal Outdone.—A day or two ago as a Brahmin stamp-vendor in the pettah was returning to his house in the evening, a Mussulman, seeing that he carried a bag of money under his arm, followed him down a narrow lane, threw chilly powder in his eyes, and attempted to run off with the money. The Brahmin, however, was not to be so done, and though smarting with pain he grappled with and seized the Mussulman and handed him over to the police.—Bangalore Herald.

A Comical Idea.—The police, we understand, are to be fitted out with boots after the English pattern instead of sandals. How pleased they must be! Might we suggest that the idea be still further developed and each peon be provided with a hat, such as worn by the rural police at home, instead of turbans? The effect would be truly striking, especially at drill, and crime we are certain would at once diminish of itself. We recommend our suggestion to the notice of the able superintendent of the Bangalore police.—Bangalore Herald.

Regimental Brahmo Somaj.—Through the exertions of Jemadar Appava Pillai and Subadar Major and Sirdar Bahadoor Veeraswamy Pillai, a Brahmo Somaj has been established among the sepoys of the 36th Madras Native Infantry, stationed at Thayetmyo. It was opened on the 25th June. Service is conducted every Thursday evening. A correspondent informs the Indian Mirror that the Somaj is steadily progressing. This is the first instance of a Brahmo Somaj in the native army. We hope the other native regiments will follow the example.

The 19th Native Infantry.—A havildar of No. 1 company 19th regiment Native Infantry memorialised his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, praying that he may be restored to his post, as he had nothing to do with the mutinous conduct of the men of No. 1 company. His grounds of appeal are that he has had thirty-nine years' service and bore a good character under his superior officers, and that on the day the men disobeyed the orders of lawful command he was in charge of the guard on duty, and had not in any way disobeyed any orders.—Madras Athenæum.

Tapioca Culture.—His Highness the First Prince of Travancore has addressed a letter to the Madras Government on the importance of introducing and extending the cultivation of the manioc or tapioca plant in the Madras Presidency. "Some twenty years ago," writes his Highness, "the manioc was scarcely cultivated, even in Travancore, but of late years its cultivation has been very rapidly extending. A large tract of undulating land between the great forests fringing the ghauts on one side and the sea-coast on the other, is formed of hard laterite soil little fit for cultivation, excepting the valleys which intersect them, and overgrown with stunted vegetation. These hillsides are fast becoming green with manioc plantations, carried on principally by the peasant population. Limited as the cultivation of manioc is, even in Travancore, it has, I am convinced, amply shown that, in the case and cheapness of production, in the abundance of yield, in its adaptability to almost any soil, in its almost entire independence on the seasons and on water supply, in its nourishing quality as an article of diet, this stands behind no other agricultural product known in India. While rice will meet the necessities of the higher and middle classes, the manioc is, one may reasonably believe, destined to a great extent to become for the poor classes of India what the potato is in Ireland, what the bread-fruit is in Java and other islands in the Indian Archipelago, and what the date palm is in Arabia." After describing the process of cultivation and of preparing the tubers for food, his Highness thus sums up the advantages of the cultivation of the manioc. (1). It grows in almost any soil; (2), the labour required for its cultivation is comparatively small, and of the simplest sort; (3), except during the first month or two, its growth is almost independent of rain-fall or irrigation; (4), its productiveness is decidedly larger than that of any other article coming under dry cultivation; (5), the mode of preparing it for the market or for domestic consumption is simple; (6), the dietetic nature of it is excellent. The Government in their order write that they highly appreciate his Highness's enlightened wish to extend the cultivation of the tapioca plant, which is said to succeed so well in the poorer soils of Travancore, and to be so acceptable as an article of food. The Collector of Tinnevelly and the committee at the Sydapett farm have been instructed to make experiments of the cuttings which his Highness very liberally offers to transmit, and report the result in due course.—Madras Mail.

Social Progress.—India is taking to all kind of English institutions, but with a fashion of its own. People's parks are spreading; but this is only another name for Mussulman gardens and maidans. We were suspicious of the real civilising influence of a Hindu club at Madras, but our readers may be in some degree reassured and the members of the Reform and Carlton fear no travesty of their proceedings. The club has out-door meetings at places which include the Government Farm and the Horticultural Gardens. At the latter establishments the members have shown great zeal in examining and obtaining descriptions of the various grasses, cereals, and other plants. Another new feature is the establishment of a newspaper, for which the members have subscribed a considerable sum.—Madras Athenæum.

The Expedition to Zimmay.—It will be remembered that Captain Lowndes, the Superintendent of Police, was deputed by the Supreme Government to Zimmay, a short time ago, on a special mission. We are glad to be informed that Captain Lowndes returned to Maulmein on the 31st May. From information furnished to us by Captain Lowndes, we are gratified to hear that his reception at Zimmay was a most hearty one, and that he was during his sojourn there treated by the Chief and other officials with the utmost kindness. Captain Lowndes reached Zimmay on the 18th April; left that place by boat to Mnang Haut on the 10th May; reached Mynelongyee on the 18th, and from thence he meant to have returned via Pahpoon, but owing to the miscarriage of a letter he had previously sent, ordering elephants and boats to be ready for him at Dahgwinseik, and to the fact of the Salween being too much swollen for the passage of elephants, he was compelled to return via Yinbine. Captain Lowndes left Myneloongyee on the 21st, and, after a journey lengthened by heavy rains and swollen nullahs, reached Yinbine on the 29th May, and Moulmein on the 31st.—Moulmein Advertiser

An Artful Dodger.—A ludicrous incident occurred the other day at Hyderabad. The trappings on a horse on which a young native lad happened to be riding fell off, and he desired a bystander to pick them up. The bystander requested the lad to dismount, when he would rearrange the trappings. The lad, not suspecting the designs of the man, did as he was requested; the bystander mounted, got the horse into a gallop, and then rode away, leaving the disconsolate boy to cry as lustily as he could for help!—Sindian.

Liberality of the Maharajah Holkar.—The Bombay Summachar learns from a reliable source that his Highness Maharajah Holkar has transmitted Rs. 1,870 to Colonel Pelly at Teheran, to relieve the sufferings of the Persian Parsees.

An Unfortunate European Vagrant.—On June 29th, in the Fort Police Court, Arthur Gunning Ryan, an European, was charged, at the instance of Mr. Inspector Killen, with wandering about the streets without any visible means of subsistence. This unfortunate man was formerly connected with the Agra Bank, being assistant manager or accountant, and he was also connected with some of the late financial associations in Bombay. He was examined before the Old Bombay Bank Commission, while lying ill in the European General Hospital, with regard to certain transactions with the Bombay and some of the other banks. The defendant stated before the magistrate, Mr. Nana Morojee, that he had been out of employ for three or four years, and for the last two years had been an inmate in the Strangers' Home. He was now without employment and without any means of subsistence. The magistrate ordered the defendant to be sent to the workhouse attached to the House of Correction, under the Vagrancy Act.

News from Persia.—By the steamer Arabia, which arrived here from Bushire yesterday, we are glad to learn that his Highness the Shah of Persia on the 24th May removed the Governor of Yezd with disgrace. It is said that the ex-Governor had entered into a combination with the grain dealers so as to be able to sell every article of provision at an exorbitant price. The matter was brought to the notice of the Shah, who issued a proclamation intimating the removal of the Governor, and the appointment of another in his place. The new Governor on taking charge of his office ordered numerous grain shops to be opened, and the result was that the sufferings of the poor Persians and others have been greatly relieved. The price of grain, which was at one time nine kronis (a kroni is equal to a shilling), has been reduced to three kronis. The news from Shiraz and Bushire is not so encouraging. The price of grain in these places was very high, and the suffering great. We are also glad to learn that the sum of Rs. 800, which was sent from this place by Messrs. Godrez, Mehrban and Co., Persian merchants, to Mr. Kaikhusro at Yezd, has been duly received. On receipt of the money, Mr. Kaikhusro at once purchased about 800 maunds of wheat, and distributed the same among his suffering countrymen.—Bombay Gazette, July 5.

Why no Circuit Courts?—In mentioning the acquittal of the three soldiers from Kurrachee who were charged with the murder of a native, the Bombay Guardian suggests that instead of bringing witnesses from great distances to Bombay a judge should go on circuit. The Guardian says:—"We can imagine the impression that will be made upon the people of Kurrachee when they hear that the three soldiers who stole the lambs and killed the poor man that had the boldness to try and stop them, and stabbed another and then drove furiously through the Sudder Bazaar, have been acquitted. We fear the unsophisticated natives are not in a fair way of learning to reverence English law. There were three native drivers in the carriage with the soldiers at the time the affray took place, and it is very strange that these men were not sent down to give evidence. After all, perhaps, the strangest thing is the arrangement that requires the transfer of such cases from a place like Kurrachee to Bombay. Witnesses are taken from their families and employments for it may be the better part of a month, and sent over the kala panee in the monsoon a voyage of 1,000 miles (to Bombay and back) at great expense; perhaps the most important witnesses manage to evade what is to them a serious punishment. In England judges go on circuit; it would be a very simple matter to arrange for the stated visit of a competent judge to the large towns of the Presidency; it is easier for Mahomet to go to the mountain than for the mountain to come to him."

Dharwar Cotton Report.—June 23.—Our latest news from Liverpool quotes fair Dhollerah at 6⅞d. per lb., and reporting that the crops in Louisana and Arkansas have suffered much damage from heavy rain; ground under cotton cultivation diminished one and a-third million acres, and the crop estimated at three and a-half million bales. The excitement which prevailed in our market at the date of our last subsided shortly after, and although there has been no lack of buyers steadily throughout the fortnight, prices have ruled from Rs. 195 to Rs. 205 for Sawginned, and Rs. 165 to Rs. 175 for Compta, and about six hundred candies of both descriptions together have been purchased, partly on European and partly on native account. To-day natives have received telegrams from Bombay, reporting Sawginned saleable at Rs. 240, and ordering them to buy here at market rates, and we now quote Sawginned at Rs. 210-5, Compta Rs. 185, Carwar, November shipment, usual terms, with an advance of Rs. 160 on the former, and Rs. 140 on the latter. At Carwar the season is quite closed, as far as arrivals of cotton are concerned, but there appears to have been some difficulty in arranging for tonnage to remove the bales already pressed there, referred to in our last. We heard that the ship City of Tanjore had actually been fixed to fill up at Carwar, but this arrangement seems to have been cancelled, and we now learn that offers have been sent for the coasting steamer Pearl to come down for a full cargo. It appears that but for this difficulty in securing either steam or sail tonnage, further orders on European account might have been executed, and that consequently the remaining stock for sale was bought up by natives.

IMPORTS.—Bombay, July 4.—The business done in Piece Goods and Yarns this week has been small, which is attributed to the firmness of first holders. The important rise in the price of Cotton in Liverpool has yet had no perceptible effect on prices here, but it has impacted into our market much more confidence. As in the previous week, the demand for local consumption and for the interior has been extremely limited. Grey Goods: A limited business has been done, but prices generally are firm. Bleached Goods show no change in prices. There is, however, more inquiry for Mulls and Jaconets, but houses are holding for higher rates, and a small business has in consequence been done. Dyed and Printed Goods continue steady. Turkey Red Goods are in the same dull state. Yarns: The business done in all kinds has been on a moderate scale, and much less than what was done in the previous week. Importers, however, are very firm, and the prices of Mule, No. 30 and No. 60, Water No. 30, and Turkey Red show an advance. Metals show no change.

EXPORTS.—Bombay, July 4.—Cotton: The advance in Liverpool has been followed by an advance here of about Rs. 10 per candy, Dholleral having been bought as high as Rs. 225 per candy. The high prices, however, now ruling here will probably check business. The total purchases made in the week for export amount to about 13,000 bales, of which the following were the principal, viz., 2,700 bales of Dholleral and Bhownuggur, at Rs. 209 to 219 per candy; 2,200 bales of Veerumgaum, as Rs. 201 to 215; 1,400 bales of Akote, at Rs. 208 to 215; 1,700 bales of Barsee, at Rs. 208 to 210; 1,400 bales of Julgaum, at Rs. 191 to 203; and 1,200 bales of Vingorla, at Rs. 192 to 194. The market closes very firm.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

Civil Servants Joining.

May 10.—No. 321.—The Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct the addition of the following rule, as rule 5, chapter 11, Covenanted Civil Service Leave Code:—

5. An officer who has no substantive appointment, and is not in the Covenanted Civil Service or the army, is not entitled to any allowance during joining time; but if such an officer, while acting in an office, is transferred to another office in the same department, and under the same local Government, the local Government may allow him to draw, during his transit, the allowance to which he would be entitled under rule 4.

Illustration.—A., who has no substantive appointment, but is officiating as sub-registrar of assurances in Burdwan, is appointed to officiate as deputy-magistrate and deputy-collector in Mymensing, and subsequently transferred to officiate as deputy-magistrate and deputy-collector in Bhaugulpore. A. is not entitled to any allowance during his transit from Burdwan to Mymensingh, but he may be allowed by the local Government to draw, during his transit from Mymensingh to Bhaugulpore, the allowance to which he would be entitled under rule 4.

Rule 4, in the same chapter, will commence thus:—"Except in the case mentioned in the next rule, an officer draws," &c.

Civil Service Subsidiary Leave.

May 16.—No. 414.—The Governor-general in Council is pleased to direct the following alterations in the Covenanted Civil Service Leave Code:—

1. The following rule is to be substituted for Rule 3 under Section XI.:—

"3. If an officer overstay subsidiary leave prefixed to furlough, his furlough will be held to have commenced in India; and, under the operation of Section X., it will be reckoned from the date of his quitting his station. This rule is not meant to interfere with cases dealt with under Rule 2 above." This rule applies in analogous cases to all officers in civil employ.

2. The following rule is to be added as Rule 3 under Section XXVI.:—

"3. When privilege leave is, on medical certificate, retrospectively commuted to furlough out of India, so much of the leave passed before embarkation may be treated as subsidiary leave, as the officer would have been entitled to count as subsidiary leave if he had originally obtained furlough, and not privilege leave." This rule applies generally.

Chaplains' Allowance.

May 17.—No. 524.—In a financial despatch from the Secretary of State for India, No. 377, dated Sept. 9, 1868, which was published by this department on Oct. 15 following, it was decided inter alia "that a special allowance of Rs. 200 per mensem should be granted to the senior chaplain of the Church of Scotland in Bengal, and special allowances of Rs. 150 per mensem each to the senior chaplains of the Church of Scotland in Madras and Bombay." The Governor general in Council is pleased to rule that these allowances shall always be drawn in full by the senior chaplains in the three Presidencies who are actually on duty, provided their salaries do not exceed Rs. 800 per mensem.

Mint and Currency.

May 18, No. 495.—Extract from a despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, addressed to the Government of India in the Financial Department, No. 89, dated March 23.

1. I have considered in Council your Legislative letter dated Jan. 18, 1871, No. 1, forwarding copy of a Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to the Government Paper Currency, with the Report of the Select Committee thereon, and a copy of the statement made by Sir Richard Temple in presenting that Report.

2. This Bill authorises the issue of notes for five rupees, the law in other respects remaining substantially unchanged.

3. In the statement of Sir Richard Temple, the objections entertained to the use of notes of so low a denomination as five rupees are referred to, as well as the measures by which he considers that loss or inconvenience to any class of the community from their being unable to obtain cash for notes in the interior of the country will be obviated.

. . . . . .

5. It appears to be essential to the success of the Government paper currency that notes of five rupees should be issued. Sir Charles Wood, in his financial despatch, dated May 2, 1861, expressed his strong opinion in favour of the introduction of the five-rupee note, observing that, unless the notes "are for such amounts as can be practically used in the ordinary payments of the people, they cannot circulate to any extent."

6. I see no reason to question the soundness of that opinion, and I have, therefore, in a legislative despatch [No. 20] of this date, informed you that the Act will be left to its operation.

7. It is of very great importance, however, that it should be fully made known that while the Government is anxious to afford every facility for the encashment of notes at the subordinate treasuries in the interior of the country, cash for notes can only be demanded at the office of issue, and that of the Presidency town to which the office of issue belongs.

8. If this be not well understood, the failure of any subordinate treasury on an emergency to give cash for a note might be regarded as a default on the part of the Government, and might exercise a very prejudicial effect in discrediting the notes in the general estimation of the people.

. . . . . .

ORDER.—Ordered that a copy of the above be published in the Gazette of India for general information.

RETIREMENT OF UNCOVENANTED SERVANTS.

Simla, June 15.—No. 2,931.—In supersession of so much of the Notification No. 794, dated Jan. 25, 1865, as relates to uncovenanted officers, the Governor-General in Council is pleased to rule that henceforth all uncovenanted servants, whether holding gazetted or ungazetted appointments, shall be required to retire from the service on attaining the age of fifty-five years. Local governments and administrations are, however, empowered in exceptional cases, which should be reported for the information of the Government of India, to allow officers of this class, serving under their orders, to continue in the service for a further period not exceeding five years, that is, until they attain the age of sixty years. If in any case it be considered desirable that any officer should continue in the service for a still further period, the case should be specially referred for the previous sanction of the Government of India.

2. Officers of the subordinate medical service employed in the civil department are excluded from the operation of the above ruling.

The statement of relief afforded by the fund from Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, 1870, shows that a total of Rs. 37,879-8-8 had been distributed among nine widows of officers, medical officers, &c., the money being paid as maintenance allowance, for travelling expenses, &c. The assistance granted was in amounts varying between Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 5,172. In one case maintenance allowance and travelling expenses from Muttra to Calcutta, also in England, were given on behalf of "Five Orphan Children of a ridingmaster (deceased) of the 12th hussars, who died at Muttra on March 7, 1870."

LEAVE AND ALLOWANCES.

May 18.—No. 561.—The following extract from a despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, addressed to the Government of India in the Financial Department, No. 106, dated April 12, is published for general information :—

I have considered in Council your financial letter, dated Feb. 22 last, No. 28, requesting that uncovenanted officers on leave in this country may not be granted extensions of leave, which would have the effect of prolonging their absence beyond two years, without the consent of the Government in India, to which these officers are subordinate. As you are of opinion that no leave beyond that authorised by the rules should be granted without the sanction of Government under which an uncovenanted officer is serving, I shall not grant any such extensions in future.

FURLOUGH TO OFFICERS OF ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Under the authority of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, the Right Hon. the Governor general in Council is pleased to notify that service in India alone can entitle an officer of Royal Engineers to furlough under Indian rules; but that an engineer officer of the Imperial list who, after completing a period of seven years' service in India, may serve for a time out of India and then return for a second tour of Indian service, is entitled to take a furlough after a service of one year from date of return.

THE ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The following order of the C. in C. is dated Simla, June 26 :—

Under orders from the Right Hon. the Sec. of State for India and the Gov. gen. of India in Council, one brigade of R.H.A. and one brigade of garrison artillery will be broken up, and in consequence of these reductions the following alterations in the designations of batteries, &c., will take place, viz. :—

Royal Horse Artillery.

Head quarters E brigade to be broken up.
A battery E brigade to become C battery D brigade.
D battery F brigade to become C battery D brigade.
B battery E brigade to become E battery D brigade.

Field Artillery.

B battery 22nd brigade to become F battery 20th brigade.
A battery 9th brigade to become A battery 20th brigade.
G battery 16th brigade to become E battery 23rd brigade.
G battery 19th brigade to become F battery 23rd brigade.

Garrison Artillery.

Head quarters 25th brigade to be broken up.
No. 1 battery 25th brigade to become No. 7 battery 24th brigade.
No. 5 battery 25th brigade to become No. 2 battery 22nd brigade.
No. 1 battery 20th brigade to become No. 7 battery 5th brigade.
No. 5 battery 23rd brigade to become No. 7 battery 6th brigade.

The five batteries of the R.H.A., lately withdrawn, are transferred to brigades on the home establishment.

Nos. 2, 3, and 4 batteries 25th brigade will be reduced, and the officers and men transfd. to other batteries, under instructions from the deputy adjt. general R.A.

The brigades in India will then be distributed as follows :—

Royal Horse Artillery—3 Brigades, 15 batteries.

	Bengal.	Madras.	Bombay.

The above changes of designations will not involve any removals of batteries.

An increase to the establishment of each battery of horse and field artillery by 12 drivers, and each garrison battery by 12 gunners is also sanctioned.

RECOGNITION OF SYED TOORKEE AS IMAUM OF MUSCAT.

The following instructions from his Excellency the Governor-General in Council regarding the recognition of his Highness Syed Toorkee as ruler of Muscat have been received by the Bombay Government :—

"I am now directed to inform you that his Excellency the Governor-General in Council is pleased to recognise Syed Toorkee as ruler of Muscat.

"I am accordingly to request that the Political Agent at Muscat may be instructed, through the resident in the Persian Gulf, to inform his Highness that it gives his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India in Council much pleasure to recognise him as the ruler of Muscat and to continue with him the same relations of friendship that existed in the days of Syed Saeed; and that his Excellency in Council trusts that the contentions which have so long distracted Oman may speedily be brought to a close, and peace and prosperity restored to his Highness's dominions.

"Orders have been issued for the Lynx to proceed to Muscat, and it is the wish of his Excellency in Council that the officer commanding may be instructed to arrange with the Political Agent for a salute to be fired in honour of his Highness Syed Toorkee on the occasion of his recognition."

Official Papers.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT, BENGAL.

Extract from the proceedings of the Hon. the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in the Public Works Department, Accounts, under date June 7.

Provincial Services Public Works Budget Orders, 1871-72.

The funds assigned by the resolution of the general branch of this secretariat for expenditure on provincial public works in Bengal during the year 1871-72, read above, aggregate Rs. 34,32,039, as follows, viz. :—

	Rs.
Permanent assignment made from Imperial Treasury by resolution No. 3,334 of Dec. 14, 1870, and subsequent orders	33,13,564
Total	Rs. 34,32,039

2. It will be observed that the amount considered to be available for expenditure does not include any portion of the estimated public works revenue of the province, though there can be no doubt that such revenue should, in accordance with para. 14 of the resolution of Dec. 14, 1870, be available in addition to the permanent assignment. There has been question regarding it, and the amount when received will be available for demands arising in the course of the year.

3. The Budget of outlay has been framed for the full amount of available funds, or Rs. 34,32,039 under the following main heads :—

Service.	Original Works. Rs.	Repairs. Rs.	Total. Rs.
Civil buildings ...	6,52,000	4,00,000	10,52,000
Communications ...	4,02,000	9,25,000	13,27,000
Miscellaneous public improvements ...	14,000	7,000	21,000
Total works ...	10,68,000	13,32,000	24,00,000
Establishments ...	...	...	9,90,000
Tools and plant ...	...	...	42,039
Grand total ...	...	...	Rs. 34,32,039

4. Original Works.—The grant for civil buildings has been appropriated as follows, viz. :—

For jails	Rs. 1,10,499
For registration buildings	2,696
For educational	10,300
For medical	36,769
For other buildings...	2,72,444
For stores for England	30,000
Reserved for minor works	1,89,292
Total	Rs. 6,52,000

5. The grant for educational buildings will be supplemented by contributions from local funds to the extent of Rs. 91,523, and that for other buildings to the extent of Rs. 6,908, making the total estimated outlay of the year on civil buildings Rs. 7,50,431.

6. The grant for roads amounts to Rs. 4,02,000 as follows :—

Works already in progress...	Rs. 1,67,218
Stores from England	1,25,950
Reserved for minor works	1,08,832
Total	Rs. 4,02,000

7. It may be remarked that the amount set apart for stores from England is provided under the orders of the Government of India, but there exists no definite information of what the actual charge against this Government during the year 1871-72 may be. The amount reserved for minor works, both under civil buildings and communications, is larger in proportion than usual, as there will probably be a necessity for providing payment for several works which have been continued in progress from the past year until the issue of these orders.

8. The grant for miscellaneous public improvements, Rs. 14,000, does not call for any remark.

9. The grant for repairs to civil buildings is Rs. 4,00,000 against the grant of Rs. 3,99,200 in the past year, and that for communications is Rs. 9,25,000 against a grant of Rs. 9,67,500 in 1870-71. It may be remarked that provision is made for the reasonable maintenance during the current year of all roads which have hitherto been maintained at the charge of imperial funds, but measures are now being taken to determine what roads shall in future be maintained as provincial roads.

10. The grant for repairs to miscellaneous public improvements, Rs. 7,000, calls for no remark.

11. The provision for establishment, Rs. 9,90,000, is unduly heavy; but the grant for imperial public works establishments, Rs. 4,47,000, is very small, and taking the entire establishments, both imperial and provincial, the total is Rs. 14,37,000, against the grant of Rs. 14,89,000 for the past year. The question of establishments needs early attention, but is delayed for orders on certain points, which have been referred to the Government of India.

12. Out of the total estimated outlay of the province, or Rs. 34,32,039, the amount set apart for expenditure in Assam, the commissioner of which province is vested in this department with the powers of a local administration as defined in the Public Works Code, is Rs. 3,48,676 as follows, exclusive of the provision made for the branch office of account :—

Civil Buildings—
Original works	Rs. 4,000
Portion of minor works grant	12,000
Repairs	26,825
		Rs. 42,825
Communications—
Original works	Rs. 33,061
Portion of minor works grant	5,000
Repairs	90,640
Miscellaneous Public Improvements—
Repairs	Rs. 150
Portion of minor works grant	500
		650
Establishment		1,67,500
Tools and plant		9,000
Total		Rs. 3,48,676

13. It will rest with the commissioner to suggest any transfer or re-appropriation of funds which may appear desirable, and it will be for that officer to suggest what modification of establishment will be desirable in order to reduce this very heavy charge.

Total as above	Rs. 3,48,676
Portion of Central Office of Account in Assam ...	20,500
Total	Rs. 3,69,176

THE NEW DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The following Resolution of the Government of India, dated Simla, June 6, is published in the Gazette of India :—

1. The reasons which induced the Government of India to propose the establishment of a new Secretariat, which shall be charged with the superintendence of all measures connected with revenue, agriculture, forests, commerce, and industrial arts of India, are fully stated in the despatch addressed to H.M.'s Secretary of State, No. 40, dated April 6, 1870 :—

2. The sanction of H.M.'s Secretary of State to the formation of the new department has now been communicated to the Government of India in the despatch of April 27 last, No. 16, after some intermediate correspondence, and it remains for the Governor general in Council to give effect to the sanction thus conveyed.

3. The Governor general in Council is accordingly pleased to direct that the new department shall be constituted from the present date, and that it shall be designated the Department of Revenue, Agriculture, and Commerce. It shall be placed under charge of an officer who shall be styled Secretary to the Government of India in that department.

4. All matters relating to the following subjects, so far as they affect the provinces of British India, will, with certain exceptions hereafter to be specified, come under the cognisance of the new department, namely—Land Revenue and Settlements, Tuccavee Advances for Works of Agricultural Improvement, Agriculture and Horticulture, Fibres and Silk, Studs and Cattle Breeding, Cattle Disease, Forests, Meteorology, Commerce and Trade, Customs (Sea and Inland), Opium, Salt, Excise, Stamps, Minerals and Geological Survey, Fisheries, Industrial Arts, Museums, Exhibitions, Statistics, Gazetteers, Weights and Measures, Census, Surveys: Revenue, Topographical, and Trigonometrical. Besides the above, which fall properly within the scope of the new department, H.E. the Governor general in Council has, for reasons of administrative convenience, decided to transfer to it temporarily the following subjects :—Municipalities, Sanitary (Lock Hospitals), Emigration, Settlements of Port Blair and Nicobars (excepting so far as relates to the management of convicts) from Home Department. The actual transfer of the business connected with Sea Customs, Opium, Excise, and Stamps, will, however, not be made from the Financial Department until further notice.

5. These arrangements will admit of the transfer to the Home Department of certain portions of work at present performed by other departments, but which properly belong to it. A considerable part of the business connected with the internal administration of the Punjab and Oude, and of the Central and other Non-Regulation Provinces, is still conducted in the Foreign Department. This arrangement was originally one of evident propriety and necessity; but the circumstances of the more important of the so-called Non-Regulation Provinces are now entirely different from what they were some years ago. Both the substantive law and the laws of procedure which are there in force, are now, for the most part, identical with those of the older provinces, and it is inconvenient and anomalous that the Foreign Department should have to deal with matters of a precisely similar character to those which come before the Home Department for other parts of India. The relief given to the Home Office by the formation of the new department now enables the transfer to be made.

From the Government of India to H.M.'s Secretary of State for India.

A department, such as we contemplate, will require some little time for consolidation before it can be raised to that position of usefulness which we hope in time to see it occupy. Subordinate departments of the Administration now scattered amongst the other Secretariats must be gathered together, guided into harmonious action, and moulded into a homogeneous whole. We do not at first propose to appoint, as suggested by your Grace, any new specially-skilled assistants to the new department; but the Commissioners of Cotton and of Inland Customs, the Director general of Forests, and other heads of subordinate branches, who will all be placed under the department of Revenue, Agriculture, and Commerce, will, with their establishments, be utilised to the utmost, not merely within the limits of their present special charges, but (so far as due regard for the interest of those charges may permit) in all kindred matters, the management of which will devolve on the new department. These officers will, in fact, perform in a great measure the duties of those skilled assistants to whom your Grace has referred. Your Grace has observed that the scope of the duties and the sphere of the operations of the Cotton Commissioner may with much advantage be gradually extended. We fully concur in this opinion, and we hope that it may be found possible to extend, in a similar manner, the scope of the duties of some of the other officers who will be placed under the new department.

We entirely share your Grace's desire that the proposed arrangements shall not lead to the creation of work leading to no adequate results. We are prepared, as time goes on, to find the work of the department increase, as the natural result of special attention being devoted to many branches of administration now unavoidably more or less neglected, or but imperfectly dealt with. But we have no intention of permitting that useless multiplication of work which may result from attempting to interfere unnecessarily with details.

Your Grace justly remarks that it is not by interference with the proper powers of the Local Governments that any real success in the administration of the new department is to be hoped for. As a rule, it is the local authorities who must originate reforms and improvements, and they also must generally decide how those reforms and improvements may best be attained; and, though we should unquestionably expect from them the fullest information as to all matters of interest and importance falling within the province of the new department, it would be with no view to any increased interference with, or even criticism of, their action, but only to enable us to make the valuable experience locally gained, and now too generally unutilised beyond those local limits, subservient to the interests and welfare of the whole Empire.

REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON EAST INDIAN FINANCE.

The Select Committee appointed "to inquire into the Finance and Financial Administration of India" have considered the matters to them referred, and have agreed to the following report :—

1. Your committee have thought it desirable to proceed with their inquiry, in the order of their receipts and expenditure, as shown in the accounts of the Government of India, referred to the committee, before entering into the consideration of the more general questions affecting the finances of India; they have accordingly examined numerous witnesses conversant with the various branches of the revenue of India, from whom information has been derived respecting the circumstances under which the revenue of India has been raised to its gross amount of £50,901,081, shown in the account for 1869-70; the conditions under which it is collected, and the contingencies which may influence its amount in future.

2. Your committee find it impossible in the present session to conclude this branch of their investigation, or to proceed with the inquiry respecting the nature of the expenditure and its relations to the revenue, and they therefore recommend that the committee be reappointed at the commencement of the next session to proceed with the inquiry.

3. Your committee have, however, been much impressed with the evidence which has been laid before them respecting the directions which were given by the Secretary of State for India in Council, in the year 1862, to extend the system of permanent settlement of the land revenue prevailing in some of the Bengal provinces to other parts of India.

4. They have not yet been able to receive the evidence of those by whom the directions were either recommended or issued. Whilst, therefore, they abstain from expressing any opinion on the question, they think it right that the attention of the Secretary of State for India in Council should be called to this evidence, in order that he may reconsider the subject, and, in the meantime, determine whether steps should not be taken to suspend any further proceedings to carry out the despatch of his predecessor.

5. Your committee have found that the evidence presented to them is in some respects wanting in precision, in consequence of the accounts in India not having been prepared in such a manner as to show the results which should be known to enable a judgment to be formed on important questions affecting the finances. Your committee therefore recommend that instructions should be given by the Government of India to some competent officer to ensure statements of account being prepared on a uniform basis and in sufficient detail, by the officers of account for each of the subordinate Governments, with exact explanations of important changes of system, and of the causes of increase or decrease of amounts in each case, for the year 1856 57, and the years 1869-70 and 1870-71, in order that these statements may be laid before the committee at the beginning of the next session.

6. The questions which have been put to the witnesses already examined, and their replies, will sufficiently indicate the nature of the accounts required, and the estimates laid upon the table of the House for the naval, military, and miscellaneous civil expenditure, both for the effective and non-effective services by her Majesty's Government, will explain the extent to which information is afforded to the House of Commons respecting the public expenditure.

7. Your committee also desire that in all cases where the Indian Government has embarked in any special enterprise, such as harbours, railways, irrigation, and other public works, telegraphy, transport, and banking, a balance sheet for the past two years, at least, should be prepared, manifesting the sources of income and the expense as charged under the various heads of the accounts of general expenditure; also statements showing, for a suitable series of years, the amount of capital expended and the balance of profit or loss.

8. Your committee are further of opinion that it would facilitate their investigations if the officer by whom the preparation of the desired statements of accounts is supervised should personally bring them before the committee to give whatever explanation may be required.

9. It will be observed that the evidence already taken has been chiefly derived from official sources, but your committee would be glad to receive the evidence of any inhabitant of India, whether of Indian or European extraction, who may desire to appear before them for the purpose of giving accurate and useful information, which, by its comprehensive intelligence, may be likely to assist the committee in their inquiries and future deliberations.

COMMISSARIAT.—A question having lately been raised by the Government of Bombay as to what amount a deputy-commissary, holding the relative rank of a captain, should be allowed to remit to England annually, the Government of India is said to have decided that warrant officers of the class referred to may be allowed to make remittances to England on the same scale as regimental officers holding corresponding substantive rank.

Miscellaneous.

THE JUTE TRADE.—The Barrow Times announces the opening of a direct jute trade between Calcutta and Barrow. Two large ships with cargoes of jute have just arrived. It would be difficult, says the Times, to over-estimate the important advantages alike to shippers and manufacturers which must arise out of the opening up of this new line of direct shipments from the jute-growing provinces of British India to one of our home ports in which the manufacture of the raw material is to be carried on under the most advantageous circumstances, and which is, moreover, directly connected by railway communication with the principal jute markets.

THE ORIENTAL COMMERCIAL BANK.—The Lords Justices heard an appeal on July 24 from a decision of Vice-Chancellor Bacon, who had allowed a claim of £3,500 against the estate of the Oriental Commercial Bank, made by the Albion Bank upon a deposit receipt issued by the former bank to Mr. Benjamin Hardwick, assigned by him to the Albion Bank. The substantial question was whether the Albion Bank was entitled to the £3,500 free from any rights of set-off which the Oriental Commercial Bank had against Mr. Hardwick. Their lordships disallowed the claim, with liberty to the Albion Bank to make such claims as they could establish as assignees of Mr. Hardwick.

MILITARY.—We learn from India, on the authority of one who is qualified to express an opinion, that the appointment of Colonel Creagh Osborne to the post of Superintending Officer of Garrison Instruction is regarded with much satisfaction in that country. Colonel Osborne has made himself very popular during the three years he has served at the head of the 6th Royals, and his antecedents justified Lord Napier in selecting him for the responsible duties he has undertaken. Several names have been put forward in connection with the position of garrison instructors, but we are assured that there is little probability of any appointments being gazetted for some little time.—Army and Navy Gazette.

THE STEAMER "APIS."—The undersigned passengers in the Austrian Lloyd's steamer Apis, from Bombay, think it due to Commandant Forte and his officers to note their sentiments and thanks for the kindness and consideration experienced by them during a protracted and most trying voyage. It would be well here to remark that a severe cyclone was experienced in the Indian Ocean. The storm raged for several days, during which all hope of safety and life was abandoned by those of the strongest nerves and accustomed to face dangers in almost any form. The sailor-like qualities of the officers were most apparent, even to unprofessional men, during the above trying crisis, and would have done credit to the marine of any nation. Under Providence, it was to them that dangers such as few have encountered were successfully met and overcome, and the Austrian Lloyd Company may congratulate themselves in possessing such able and experienced officers in their service as they have on board the Apis. They take leave of Commandant Forte and his officers with sentiments of much respect and kindness, wishing them the success in life which their merits deserve. Trieste, on board the steamer Apis, Sunday, June 4th, 1871.—T. W. Fordyce, Major-General, Royal Artillery; Nellie Birch, Lizzie Birch, G. H. W. Hoggan, Capt. 17th Bengal Cavalry, John G. Watson, Robert C. Beeston, W. Schnef, Bernie Browne, and others.

INDIAN APPEAL.—RAMAMANI AMMAL v. KALANTHAI NACHIAR.—The arguments in this case, on the third day of hearing, were ended. The case was peculiar, and raised a question under the Hindoo law affecting considerable property. The case came before the committee on an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Madras, dated the 17th of May, 1866, which reversed a judgment of the Zillah Court which was in favour of the appellant, and established the right and title of her infant to the property in suit. The question was whether the infant, who was the son of a Zemindar who died possessed of considerable wealth, was entitled to claim under the Hindoo law. His mother and guardian was described as the "second widow," and the respondent as the "first widow" of the Zemindar. The parties are said to be of different castes, and the allegation on the part of the respondent was that the appellant, who was said to have been married to the Zemindar, was a "dancing girl," and that she served the god Easvaran in the Pagoda at Teruchuligai, where she was kept for the purpose of prostitution, and could not have been legally married to the Zemindar. The judge of the Zillah Court decided in favour of the appellant, but the High Court set it aside, and the question was whether she had been a "dancing-girl," or the daughter of one Shummeenga Pillad, who held a good position as head man of Teruchuligai. Judgment was reserved. The Committee rose for the vacation, the sittings having terminated.

INDIAN BONUS COMPENSATION.—The Indian officers in this country have petitioned the Duke of Argyll for compensation, in the matter of their lost bonuses, on the terms secured by clause 4 of the Army Bill to the new line regiments. The answer to this petition has not yet been received, but when the Bill has passed its second reading in the Upper House, his Grace will probably accept the logical necessity of compensating Indian officers on the principle established by Sir C. Wingfield for the officers directly benefited by clause 4. Now that the opium revenue promises to yield a large surplus on this year's estimates, there will be all the less excuse for postponing a concession to which the old Indian officers have certainly the strongest claim. If in the Queen's army over-regulation payments were always managed under the rose, the bonus system in the Company's army was started under the formal sanction of the Court of Directors and the Board of Control. On this point a letter from an officer of Indian rank to the Pall Mall Gazette clearly reflects the feelings of his fellow-sufferers. "This purchase discussion," he says, "will shame the Home Government into paying the Indian officers their full bonus compensation. They cannot give Queen's officers over-regulation prices without recognising the bonus system of the Indian army." Logically, and in common decency, of course they cannot, but in all such questions it is practically might alone that makes right. It is astonishing how little conscience there is in corporate bodies or Government officials.—Home News.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, July 24.—THE MEDICAL SERVICE IN INDIA.—Colonel SYKES asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether Doctors Gopal Chunder Roy and Krishna Dhurr Ghose, who came to England to compete for commissions in the Medical Service in India, and had obtained the prescribed degrees in medicine and surgery, but were debarred from reaping the reward of their studies and outlay by the competitive examinations being from time to time postponed on the ground of medical officers not being required in India, might, nevertheless, be now allowed to compete, with a view to their being placed on a supernumerary list to fill up vacancies as they occur, to avoid otherwise the total and grievous loss to them of their time and money, as their present ages would debar them from competing at any future examination.—Mr. GRANT DUFF: I regret that we have no powers to do what my hon. and gallant friend wishes. When the Government of India informs us that it wants such and such a number of medical officers, we announce that such and such a number will be selected by competitive examination, but we cannot ask some score or hundred medical students to enter for a competitive examination, in which the prize would be the chance that the successful candidates might at some indefinite future period be employed as Indian medical officers. I don't think that would be a fair proceeding either to the medical schools or to the Government of India.—Colonel SYKES asked when the next competition would be held.—Mr. GRANT DUFF: I have not the remotest idea. (A laugh.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, July 24.—PROMOTION IN THE ARMY BY SELECTION.—Mr. D. DALRYMPLE asked the Secretary of State for War whether the system of promotion by selection now determined upon was to apply to the medical as well as to the other officers of the Army.—Lord E. CECIL asked whether promotion by selection was to be extended to the Engineers and Artillery and other non-purchase corps in the Service.—Mr. CARDWELL replied that under the existing warrant promotion of inspectors was now by selection, and that the question of extending selection to the other officers and to officers in the non-purchase corps would be considered hereafter.

EXCHANGES IN THE ARMY.—In answer to Mr. OTWAY, Mr. CARDWELL said that it was intended by the Government to make regulations for all proper exchanges in the army, but that exchanges for money would be prohibited.

HOUSE OF LORDS, TUESDAY, July 25.—EAST INDIA (BISHOPS' LEAVE OF ABSENCE) BILL.—The Duke of ARGYLL moved the second reading of this Bill, explaining that its object was to put the Bishops of Madras, Bombay, and Calcutta in an equal position with regard to leave of absence. The Bill was read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, July 25.—THE MARTINI RIFLE.—Mr. OSBORNE asked the Secretary for War whether, after the adverse opinions on the Martini lock expressed at the late Wimbledon meeting, the Government intended to proceed with the manufacture of that arm; whether they would consent to an independent inquiry into the cause of the defects shown to exist in the lock arrangements; and whether the attention of the Secretary of State for War had been called to those defects by opinions placed in his hands of some of the most eminent mechanical engineers in the kingdom.—Mr. CARDWELL: The adverse opinions assumed in the question have not reached me. On the contrary, the opinions which have reached me have been eminently favourable. A careful inquiry was made by the committee, the result of which was at variance with the existence, assumed in the question, of defects in the lock arrangements. Rival inventors have sent in opinions of mechanical engineers favouring their respective inventions. These opinions have been considered by the committee, by whom eminent engineers were examined. I am of opinion, and this opinion the House after full debate has confirmed, that there is no ground for disturbing the decision of the committee in favour of the Henry-Martini rifle.—Mr. BASS inquired whether some of the most practical and scientific men at the Wimbledon meeting had not declared that the spiral spring was unsuitable for the military service.—Mr. CARDWELL said that as no notice had been given of this last question, he could not say what passed at Wimbledon, but he repeated that the opinions which had reached him were favourable to the Henry-Martini rifle. —Mr. OSBORNE then said he would take another opportunity of reviving the subject.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY, July 27.—THE ARMY BILL.—Lord CAIRNS placed on the table an amended version of the Duke of Richmond's resolution on the Army Bill, so as to remove any questions as to the regularity of the proceeding. The new resolution is as follows :—"This House, before assenting to the second reading of this Bill, desires to express its opinion that the interposition of the Executive during the progress of a measure submitted to Parliament by her Majesty, in order to attain by the exercise of the prerogative, and without the aid of Parliament, the principal object included in that measure, is calculated to depreciate and neutralise the independent action of the Legislature, and is strongly to be condemned."

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, July 27.—SUPERSESSION OF COLONELS.—Colonel ANSON asked the Secretary of State for War when he intended to bring in the Bill alluded to in the correspondence laid upon the table of the House on the subject of the supersession of Colonels in the Royal Army.—Mr. CARDWELL said that according to the interpretation put by Lord Cranworth's Commission upon the Acts of 1858 and 1860, and to the report of Lord Cairns's Commission of 1870, there is no power to give effect to the report of the select committee of last session without the interposition of the Legislature. The intention of the Bill is to afford the opportunity of dealing with that report with a qualification agreed to by the India Office. That Bill has been prepared, and he should be ready to introduce it when a suitable occasion offers.

INFANTRY EQUIPMENT.—Sir G. GREY asked the Secretary of State for War if he had considered whether advantage might not be taken of the approaching autumn encampment and manœuvres of troops to test the plan of infantry equipment with the newly-adopted valise system proposed by Lieutenant-Colonel Carter, which could be done without any cost, as fifty sets of the proposed equipment were at present in the military stores.—Sir H. STORKS said that after a series of trials and experiments, extending over some years, the new valise equipment had been adopted for the army. The reports of it are most favourable in every respect, and it is liked by the troops. On the other hand, the knapsack proposed by Lieutenant-Colonel Carter has been fully and fairly tried, and has not been found satisfactory, and the Field-Marshal Commander-in-Chief recommends that no further trial of it be made.

HOUSE OF LORDS, FRIDAY, July 28.—STRATEGICAL EDUCATION.—Lord STRATHNAIRN moved that an humble address be presented to her Majesty for return of any measures that may have been taken for remedying the want of a system of strategical education in the army and reserved forces, for movements or reviews of large bodies, whether of the regular or reserved forces, and for camps of instruction for the practice of manœuvres representing operations in actual warfare. The noble lord, in support of his motion, referred to the report of Sir Hope Grant upon the recent volunteer review at Brighton, in which he stated that the manœuvres of the corps engaged on the occasion were so bad that had an enemy appeared he could easily have destroyed the forces with his artillery. They were now going to have a camp in Berkshire, and it was most desirable that the officers that would take part in the manœuvres there should be well drilled in strategic movements, otherwise the whole thing would be a failure.—Lord NORTHBROOK said there were no papers on the subject which might with any profit be laid before their lordships, but he assured the noble lord that the authorities at the War Office would give their best attention to the matters referred to in his motion.

NAUTICAL INCIDENTS.

The Anazi, Hillman, from Cochin to Falmouth, which arrived at St. Helena on June 27 and proceeded, had experienced a hurricane, accompanied with a very heavy cross sea, June 6, in lat. 34 S., lon. 28 E., during which she lost sails, rails, a boat's spare spars, and everything movable from the deck; the vessel was on her beam ends whilst under bare poles for twenty-four hours.

The Locksley Hall, Richards, from Akyab to Falmouth, which arrived at St. Helena on June 28 and proceeded, had experienced a hurricane on June 6 in lat. 96 S., lon. 23 E., during which she split several sails, and lost water-casks and several movable things from the decks.

The Louisa, of London, Lansdown, from Singapore to Boston, with a general cargo, which was reported to have put into Port Elizabeth leaky, will have to discharge. She had experienced very heavy weather off Pleitenburg's Bay June 6, and lost bulwarks, boats, and sails, had her ports washed in, and was more or less strained. At one time she had six feet of water in her hold, but made no more water after it was pumped out.

The Radiant, Chase, from Shields to Singapore, anchored in the Downs July 22, with two men sick on board, supposed with small-pox.

The Maritana, McDonald, from Bombay to Liverpool, which put into Algoa Bay May 26, leaky, is discharging her cargo, damaged.

The fire on board the Golden Fleece, from Boston to Bombay, which put into Halifax July 5, was not extinguished until July 7, when she had more than twenty feet water in her hold.

The British Crown, from Rangoon, which arrived at Falmouth July 25, is reported to be making a little water.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

Messrs. Jay Cooke, M'Culloch, and Co.'s New York "Weekly Circular," with Ma dates to July 12, and Cable despatches to July 26, says:—

The local Money Market continues easy. On call loans the ruling rate is 3 pe cent., with exceptions at 2 and 4 per cent.; on discounts, however, there is a slight hardening tendency, caused by the expectation of higher rates when the cro movements have fully set in. Currency is flowing towards the interior, and hen last week's bank statement showed a loss of 1,370,000 dols. in legal tenders. Sin our last advices, considerable purchases of Government Bonds have been made f foreign account, and the resulting supply of bills has caused the rates of foreig exchange to be easier. Gold has declined in consequence of the shipments of bond and the fall in the gold premium has weakened the currency quotations for Unite States Bonds. The supply of cotton bills is now assuming very narrow propo tions, the total export of cotton last week being only 7,900 bales, against 25,100 t the like week of 1870, the heavy falling off being due to the large advance in th price of the staple. There is, however, a more liberal supply of local produce bill as may be inferred from the fact that the exports from this port for the week closin yesterday amounted to 4,900,000 dols., against 3,900,000 dols. in the correspondin week of last year. We have nothing new to chronicle respecting the pending G vernment Loan. Various rumours are circulated respecting it; one affirming th Assistant Secretary Richardson, now in Europe, has negotiated a large amou there; another, that the Secretary of the Treasury has ordered the withdrawal o the advertisements of the Loan; and yet another, that arrangements are in pr gress for pressing off the unsold balance of 130,000,000 dols. within the summe but, at present, no official announcement has been made on any of these point although the reports have been circulated for some days.

Allowances for Medical Charges.—It is notified that the provi sions of G.G.O. No. 1,192 of 1870, prescribing allowances for additiona medical charges, are applicable to medical officers in charge of civil sta tions or holding equivalent appointments.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

BOWEL COMPLAINTS.—DIARRHŒA.—When these diseases prevail, immediate recourse should be had to this Ointment, which should be well rubbed two or three times a-day upon the abdomen, and the intestinal irritation will gradually subside. All inflammation will be subdued, and excessive action restrained. This treatment, assisted by judicious doses of Holloway's Pills, is applicable to all forms of diarrhœa and dysentery, attended by heart sickness, griping, flatulence, and other distressing and dangerous symptoms. After rubbing in the Ointment, a flannel binder should be worn, and the patient should be restricted to a farinaceous diet for a few days, till the urgency of the disease has been diminished by the persevering employment of these remedies.

Summary and Review.

THE Overland Mail of July 12 from Bombay has taken an unusually long time on its passage home. In spite however of delays beyond Suez it was reported to have left Brindisi at 5 A.M. on Saturday, and ought therefore to have reached London this morning. We hear however that it will not arrive before this evening—long after our usual time of publication.

THE Delhi Gazette complains of another grievance which may safely be called "an infraction of the Parliamentary Guarantee," secured to it on the amalgamation in 1861. The three high appointments of Adjutant-general at the three Presidencies are all held, it seems, at the present moment, by officers of the British Army—viz., in Bengal by Colonel the Hon. F. Thesiger, in Madras by Colonel Roe, and in Bombay by Colonel Kirby. This is manifestly a gross injustice to the officers of the Indian Army. We agree with our contemporary in thinking that some definite rule for the proper bestowal of these much-coveted appointments between the two services is greatly to be desired; and we trust that the India Office will look sharply after the interests of its own officers in this matter.

WRITING to the Times of Thursday last, "An Officer from Secunderabad" impugns the statement to which we referred last week, as to the likelihood of the cholera at that station having arisen from the water of a certain well. The disease, he argues, could not have been thus propagated, for "there is a strict order against the men using the well for drinking purposes." It is only the horses of the 18th Hussars who are allowed to drink the water in question; therefore the late outbreak had nothing to do with that particular well. It is added that all the drinking-water comes from Trimulgherry, which is two miles off. All this may be true, but it hardly agrees with what we quoted from the Bombay Gazette about the well-water used by the 18th Hussars, which "is supposed to be the worst in the cantonments." It is possible of course that the paper in question may have been misinformed, or may refer to some other well than the one of which "An Officer" may be speaking. But the statement, if true, clearly implies that the Hussars have been drinking water from some well in the station, not from any supply at Trimulgherry; nor is it unlikely that some of the men may have drunk of the water which was still thought good enough for their horses. Be that as it may however, we shall be glad to hear that some inquiry has been ordered into the causes of the recent outbreak of cholera at Secunderabad. "An Officer" asserts that in 1869 the regiment suffered more from disease—not cholera—than any other in India, that it was, he believes, actually under orders to exchange stations with the 16th Lancers at Bangalore, but that reasons of economy impelled the Government of Madras to countermand the exchange. May we therefore infer that its predisposition to cholera was increased by its previous unhealthiness, itself resulting from too long a stay in one station? If so, the economy was cruelly misplaced.

COLONEL MAXWELL, Superintendent of the Cossipore Gun-Foundry, appears to have taken a useful hint from the usages of native Indian armies. In old days the zamburak or camel-gun figured largely in native warfare. It was a kind of small field-piece throwing a ball of one or two pounds from a kind of saddle fastened to a camel's back; the camel being made to kneel down when the piece was to be fired. Colonel Maxwell would improve on the native process by substituting for the old gun a small rifled cannon weighing about a hundredweight, or else a Gatling mitrailleur of the same weight. Of the success of such an improvement there can, we think, be little doubt. You may train an Indian camel to do almost anything, and the weight of a Gatling gun would be well within its carrying powers, even if Colonel Maxwell's scheme of adding thereto the weight of an infantry soldier, with his musket and sixty rounds of balled cartridge, were to be carried out. Camels thus equipped could easily march their thirty or even forty miles a-day, and a camel corps of this description would do no small amount of service in campaigns against native Indian troops. Both Sir Charles Napier and Sir Hugh Rose made good use of camel-corps carrying infantry alone. The only novelty of the new arrangement would be the union of two distinct war-engines in one equipment. One of the principles involved in this experiment might also be applied in India to bodies of infantry mounted on horses for marching purposes. Against a nimble-footed enemy nothing could be more effective than the system which once prevailed in England, and which Sheridan wielded with such fatal purpose towards the end of the Civil War in America. But for his masses of dragoons whom he used at need as infantry, the final route of Lee's soldiers in their retreat from Richmond would have been far less speedy and decisive than it was. In short, the experience of late years tends strongly to confirm the soundness of Sir Henry Havelock's proposal to garrison India with mounted riflemen.

IN discussing the Army Bill some of the Peers put in a good word for the Indian Officers who have not received a fair measure of compensation for the advantages lost to them by the Amalgamation. Lord Kellie, himself an old Indian officer, pleaded the cause of his former comrades in terms fully justified by the clause which secures to officers of the new Line Regiments compensation for the bonuses they would have received on retirement from their own juniors, had purchase not been abolished from a certain date. Lord Salisbury added a strong recommendation to the same effect, pointing out what is perfectly true, that the liberal terms assured by the Bill to English officers would be certain to raise in the minds of Indian officers a belief that their treatment would not be less liberal. He therefore urged the Secretary for India to "consider whether it was possible to extend to old Indian officers the liberality now shown by Parliament to British officers." Such counsel comes with the greater force from a former Secretary for India whose treatment of Indian officers in respect of compensation has proved anything but liberal. In view however of what has now been decreed for the English army, his Lordship, as his own words plainly imply, would be the last to withhold from the Indian army a concession as large and in their case even more equitable than that which the Lords have confirmed without a question to officers in the non-purchase regiments of the home army. These latter are to receive the regimental bonuses, which under other circumstances they were entitled by custom in defiance of actual law to receive. How much stronger then are the claims to like treatment of those Indian officers, who under the old system would have received from their juniors a bonus sanctioned, not only by regimental usage, but still more by the express permission of the Court of Directors and the Board of Control! To the officers concerned it will henceforth seem a glaring injustice to offer them the compensation for which they have been asking so many years past, on terms less favourable than those accorded to their former comrades in the new Line Regiments. A mere repayment of their former outlay would fall peculiarly hard on those who were longest in rising to the rank of Captain or Major. Suppose for instance that a retired Captain of twenty years' service had paid away only £200 in buying steps, whereas he himself on retirement would have been sure of a bonus of £1,200 or £1,500. What fairness would there be in repaying him only the £200, instead of granting him fair value for his own step? A much younger captain who had paid out, let us say, £1,000, would, in receiving that money back again, recover nearly the actual value of his step, or five times as much as the other officer whose step might have been worth a good deal more. On such a principle the officers who had been least lucky in their promotion would ultimately come off worst. In the face of Clause IV. of the Army Bill, and of the comments thus offered in the Upper House, it will never do for the Duke of Argyll to "adhere to the arrangement made by Lord Cranborne." That arrangement, as we have repeatedly shown, was singularly unfair; its unfairness has lately been affirmed by two out of the three local governments and by all three Commanders-in-Chief; and that unfairness will only be lessened, not removed, by compensating each officer for the full amount of his own previous payments. Give him his proper bonus, or even two-thirds of it, down, and we venture to predict that no more murmuring will reach the India Office on this particular score.

We observe that the claims of old Indian officers to bonus compensation are being kept in remembrance by their friends in the House of Commons. On Monday night, in reply to a question from Colonel Jervis, Mr. Grant Duff promised that, if the Army Bill became law—of which, by the way, there is no doubt—the Duke of Argyll would "most carefully consider whether its provisions have any, and if so what, bearing upon the decision come to by his predecessors, in respect to the claims of Indian officers." Taken with the context supplied by circumstances, this means, we presume, that Indian officers will be treated not much less liberally than their comrades at home. It was a mistake however of Colonel Jervis to ask for anything less than the terms already granted to the new line regiments.

"Parturiunt montes; nascetur ridiculus mus." Seldom has the mountain in labour produced so abortive a mouse as the amended scheme for placing thirty thousand English soldiers in the field. Instead of marching them out for exercise on the Berkshire downs, the same number of men are to be distributed between Aldershot, Chobham, and Woolmer. The chief reasons alleged for this untoward change are the lateness of the harvest and the wet weather that may afterwards ensue. Horses, we are told, are difficult to get; the great contractors fight shy of engagements with the Government; and owners of horses are afraid of having their beasts picketed out at night. It makes one smile to hear that English horses are too delicate to brave the night-air of early autumn; but that joke is a trifle to the idea of English soldiers being unequal to the chances of rough weather about the equinox. They had better be put under glass cases at once, poor creatures, if they cannot be trusted to face a little wind and rain without utter ruin to their delicate health. As for the horses, it might pay to import a few hundred from India, where they have not shown the same incapacity for standing out in all weathers. Joti Parsad, the great contractor who fed and moved Lord Gough's armies in the Sutlej and Punjab campaigns, has already gone to his rest; but perhaps some other Indian contractor might be induced next year to do our troops in England the same good turn at a moderate price. Seriously however, it is dreadful to think that such poor excuses for shirking a great experiment should go forth from the lips of an English minister. Nobody believes them, and yet the alternative reading is hardly more credible. Is it possible that the new arrangements are meant to cover a collapse of the Control Department? Are we really to infer that the new system of control from which so much was predicted has broken down at the first trial so shamefully that, after many weeks' notice, it has been found impossible to supply thirty thousand men with food and carriage for a fortnight, during their manœuvres in a country forty miles distant from London? Anyhow we are left to take our choice between two hypotheses, each of which is equally discreditable to a country which pays fifteen millions a-year for its military defences in time of peace.

At the opening of the Civil Engineering College on Cooper's Hill last Saturday, Colonel Chesney, the head of the new college, made some pregnant remarks on the uses of culture in aid of purely professional work. His complaint regarding the general want of culture among his countrymen in India may sound more or less unfair to those who compare the bulk of Englishmen in India with what they know of Englishmen of the same class at home. Our own experience, coupled with the recollection of all that has been done for India by men of known culture in many fields of art and science, would hardly lead us to endorse Colonel Chesney's complaint to its fullest extent. We should be inclined to hold indeed that the mass of Anglo-Indians show rather more culture than their countrymen at home, and are apt to take broader views of most questions of the day. But the reputed author of "The Battle of Dorking" has perhaps been less fortunate in his experiences or more exacting in his demands. It is possible too that his reproach was specially levelled at that class of English employés whose ranks are henceforth to be recruited from Cooper's Hill. If so, we may accept him as a competent witness to the defects of a profession which has never been renowned in this country for breadth or depth of culture. That the want of this higher education produces in Anglo-Indian society "an engrossing attention to official matters," resulting in a "tendency to hold extreme opinions and a one-sidedness regarding vexed questions of polity and administration," seems to us a doubtful inference from an admissible fact. If the average Anglo-Indian displays more zeal for work than breadth and tolerance of view on speculative themes, does he not so far justify his descent from the active, energetic, strong-willed, but somewhat narrow-minded race, which, in spite of its defective culture, has made the British Empire what it is? With all that Colonel Chesney said however in praise of culture as a joy for ever and a safeguard from mental stagnation we heartily agree.

Colonel Chesney's parting advice to his hearers about keeping up an "etiquette of manners and a standard of morals which shall banish anything like 'bad form' from the precincts of this place" was full of a manly dignity which should go home to the hearts of most English youths. If the students who listened to him will manfully follow out his counsels, the new college will some day be setting the standard of moral and intellectual culture for all India.

It is to be hoped that the Judicial Committee Bill which was read a second time on Saturday in the House of Commons will fare better than its unlucky, ill-constructed predecessor of last year. It cannot be too late in the session to pass a measure which India can ill afford to put off again for the mere chance of something better in the long run, and which, as far as it goes, will anyhow tend to satisfy the need of the moment. It may be a piece of makeshift legislation, but, pending any larger reform in the whole structure of the Highest Court of Appeal, for which we must probably wait some years, it bids fair to answer its immediate purpose of keeping down the arrears of Indian business.

From the official statement of Traffic on Indian Railways for the year 1870 we learn that the East Indian Railway realised £673,386 on its passenger traffic, or £497 per mile, and £1,735,112, or £1,280 a mile on merchandise measuring 954,966 tons. Of passengers it conveyed only 34,466 first-class and 108,382 second-class, against 5,209,481 third and fourth-class passengers, at an average rate of 2¼d., 1½d., and ⅜d., respectively, for each of the first three classes. On this railway there were 1,355 miles open in all. The Great Indian Peninsula had 1,258 miles open, including 385 opened during the year. Its earnings amounted to £381,551, or £303 a mile on 29,849 first-class, 166,011 second-class, and 3,130,164 third and fourth-class passengers, carried at averages of 2¼d., 1½d., ½d., and 5-16d. a mile. The freight carried at the same time brought in £1,133,389 on 381,551 tons, or £901 a mile. The Madras Line, 783 miles long, carried 2,105,566 passengers in all, of whom 10,089 were of the first and 107,724 of the second-class. The fare for second-class passengers averaged ⅝d. a mile by day and 1½d. by night. Of merchandise it carried 303,042 tons, bringing in only £256,769, or £328 a mile. Much larger was the traffic both relative and absolute, on the Bombay and Baroda Line, which carried over its 312 miles as many as 2,555,848 passengers, of whom 13,753 were first-class, and 118,998 second-class, at an average fare of 1⅝d., ⅞d., ⅜d. a mile for each. While the passenger receipts on the Madras Line were only £161,226 in all, or £206 a mile, those of the shorter Bombay line were £168,559, or £540 a mile. The goods traffic of the latter realised £899 a mile, or £280,409 in all on 244,796 tons. Still larger however was the return of £576 a mile from the 1,324,907 passengers carried by the Eastern Bengal Railway over a length of only 113 miles, although its average profit on goods carried was somewhat lower, being £867 a mile. On this line too the relative number of first-class passengers, 27,340 far exceeds that of any other line, while its charges for each class, 1½d., ¾d., ⅜d. per mile, are remarkably low.

The next largest receipts for passengers were yielded by the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway, which shows an average of £341 per mile, but only one of £142 on goods. The Sindh and Punjab Line on the other hand gives an average of £345 a mile for goods and £235 for passengers. The lowest average for goods, £21 a mile, is shown by the Carnatic Railway, only nineteen miles long, but its passenger receipts average as much as £159 a mile. On the Southern of India Line the passenger receipts average £222 a mile, and those from goods only £177 a mile. The Calcutta and South-Eastern shows an average of £173 on passengers and only £68 on goods on an a length of twenty-eight miles in all. Its profit on goods is already surpassed by the little Khangaum Line of eight miles, with its average of £98 a mile on 11,463 tons carried.

Among the latest additions to the Indian Museum at the India Office are a few paintings presented to the India Office by Captain Grindlay, who was an Indian officer before he founded the well-known firm of Grindlay and Co. One of them, a little oil-painting of Goldsmiths at Baroda, busied with their blow-pipes, was drawn by him so long ago as 1806. The water-colour view of the Jumma Musjid at Ahmedabad was sketched in 1809, nine years before the minarets of the old Mosque were overthrown by an earthquake. There is an interesting portrait in oils of the young Moorvie Rajah of Kattiawar as he looked in 1814; and a pleasing landscape from the Nilgherry Hills completes the collection which has been placed in the Museum through the agency, we believe, of Sir Bartle Frere. A few more pictures from the same source will probably soon find their way to the same resting-place.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE INDIAN SERVICES, &c., REPORTED SINCE LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s Forces.—Lieut. W. S. Poole, R.A., son of the late Col. Matthew Poole, of H.M.'s Madras Army, at Blarney, Cork, aged 29, July 28.

Bengal.—Capt. Richard A. Fitzgibbon, late of the H.E.I.C.S., at 20, Duke-street, W., July 31.

Bengal Civil Service.—Mr. Bradford Hardinge, B.C.S., son of the late Major Gen. Hardinge, K.H.R.A., at Hyde-park-square, aged 38, July 31.

Bombay.—Mr. A. H. T. Parker, late of H.M.'s Indian Navy, aged 30, Aug. 3.

INDIAN SURVEYS.—IV.

In the field of meteorology much ground has been covered since Mr. Traill and Colonel Pearse began keeping journals at Calcutta in 1784 and 1785. Among their ablest successors we come upon the name of that universal genius James Prinsep, of General Hardwicke, Mr. Barrow, Dr. Hunter, and the Rev. R. Everest. Later still we find General Cunningham, Dr. Hooker, and Colonel Strachey, making good scientific use of their eyes and instruments in the course of their travels. Their labours have since been followed up by a host of observers, official and other, including the Messrs. Schlagintweit, General Boileau, Mr. Pogson, Mr. J. Brown, Colonel Thuillier, Dr. Buist, Colonel Sykes, Drs. J. Murray, Neil, and Thomson, and Mr. Blanford. The series of tidal observations dates from Mr. Kyd's researches on the Hooghly between 1806 and 1827. His work was continued by James Prinsep. In this branch of inquiry the Indian Navy rendered good service, in the persons of Captains Ross, Montriou, and Taylor. Dr. Buist was another useful worker in the same field. Of late years Mr. W. Parkes, C.E., has added largely to our knowledge of tidal processes at Kurrachee and Bombay; but little has yet been done towards a systematic investigation of the tides all round the Indian coast, as recommended forty years ago by Dr. Whewell.

In a short, but pregnant chapter, Mr. Markham reviews the course of astronomical research in India, from the earliest Indian astronomers, Aryabhata and Vaharamihira, who flourished in the fifth century after Christ, down to the astronomical lights of our own day. Aryabhata had got so far in the science as to hold that the moon and primary planets were illumined only by the sun, and to maintain the true theory of solar and lunar eclipses. His knowledge of algebra was also great. The Arab astronomers of a later time improved on the learning they had borrowed from the Hindoos. Under Mahommedan rule the Hindu Rajah, Jey Singh, gave a new impulse to the study of astronomy in the eighteenth century. Of our own countrymen Mr. Taylor, Captain Jacob, Major Tennant, Messrs. Caldecott, Pogson, and Brown, have done most for astronomical science in India, especially Mr. Pogson, whose labours at the Madras Observatory are still in full swing. The results produced at this observatory entitle it, says Mr. Markham, "to take rank with the observatories of Europe."

In the domain of Physical Geography Mr. Markham's Memoir reports steady progress from the first surveys of the Himalayas, conducted by Hodgson, Herbert, Webb, Hardwicke, and Baillie Fraser, down to the latest researches of Mr. E.

Prinsep in the Punjab. The first three explored the mountains between the Sutlej and the Kalî; Hardwicke made his way to the capital of Kashmere; and Fraser was the first to cross the range on whose southern slope rises the Jumna. A few years later Moorcroft and Trebeck explored the upper channels of the Indus and the Sutlej, while Dr. Gerard went up the Spiti Valley. Many years earlier Mr. Bogle and Captain Turner had crossed the Eastern Himalayas from Bhotan to the Sanpu Valley, in charge of an embassy from Warren Hastings to the Lama of Tibet—a feat never since accomplished by later travellers. In the course of several embassies to Nepal, Messrs. Kirkpatrick, Crawford, and Buchanan Hamilton gathered some useful information concerning the central portion of the great mountain range. Captain Herbert was the first to show that the line of water-parting in the Himalayas did not follow the line of greatest elevation. Amidst the wilderness of huge peaks "confusedly heaped together," he found a clue to their relative positions by tracing the courses of the rivers and their tributary streams. He also discovered that the loftiest peaks were among a series of transverse ridges branching out thousands of feet above the Indo-Gangetic chain. About the same time Vigne and Falconer traversed Ladakh, while Jacquemont and Hügel explored Kashmere. Cunningham, then a major of the Bengal Engineers, pointed out the six different ranges, running parallel from south-east to north-west, which compose the Western Himalayas. In surveying Kemaon and Western Tibet, the brothers Strachey added fresh knowledge to the stock obtained from previous explorers. Henry Strachey described among other things the tremendous gorge where the Sutlej flows over bare rocks between walls of alluvium more than a mile high. His brother Richard gave a full description of the Sewalik Hills, with the Dhoons or broad valleys that divide them from the Himalayas. Dr. Thomson, the first traveller who surmounted the Karakorum Pass since the days of the Chinese pilgrim, Fa Hian, justified Herbert's method of mapping out the Western Himalayas, which he found to consist of two great systems, the Cis-Sutlej and the Trans-Sutlej.

As Resident at Katmandu, Mr. Hodgson amassed much valuable information regarding the structure of the Nepalese Himalayas. Following up his researches, Dr. Hooker, who in company with Dr. Campbell explored Sikkim, discovered an analogy between the Sikkim Himalaya and Norway, and described with fresh precision the character of the great mountain mass which traverses Asia from east to west in parallel ranges, intersected everywhere by transverse chains, whence radiate other branches dividing the tributaries of the great rivers. From all the information thus gathered Mr. Trelawney Saunders has been enabled to draw up a sketch map and memoir, in which the physical features of the great Himalayan region have been clearly and carefully defined. He shows that the Himalayas culminate in two long parallel ranges, divided by a series of valleys, through which flow the upper courses of all the great Indian rivers, while the northern range forms the great water-parting between the Ganges basin and the Sanpu. The relations of the Himalayas to the Karakorum, Hindu Kush, and Kuen Lun ranges, are also clearly brought out, and the character of the highlands eastward of Assam has been defined as accurately as our existing knowledge of those regions would allow.

In his published writings General Cunningham has given many interesting details regarding the rivers in the Punjab and the changes which continually affect their course. These changes are mostly due to the falling of masses of rock and parts of glaciers in the upper valleys. In the time of Akbar the Chenab and Indus met sixty miles above their present junction at Mithankote. Mooltan was once on two islands in the Ravee, whereas it now lies close to the Chenab. It was not till about 680 A.D. that the Indus leaving its former bed cut its westward passage through the rocks between Roree and Bukkur. Earthquakes like that which effaced Brahminabad, have also played their part in these changes. Colonel Tod, Sir A. Burnes and Sir B. Frere have in their turn described the Runn of Cutch and the adjacent country. Several writers have thrown light on the physical changes in the great plains of Hindustan and the lower part of the Brahmapootra valley. Mr. Fergusson illustrated the law by which all rivers flow in curves, and pointed out the tendency of alluvial streams to raise their own banks. Discussing the formation of deltas he concludes that four or five thousand years ago the tide reached up the Ganges as far as Rajmahal, and that Bengal Proper was then a vast bay or lagoon. The first cities built in the plains were Hastinapoor and Ayodhya far up the Ganges and the Gogra; after a time, as the land rose above the water, new cities sprang up at Kanauj, Patna, Gour, and at length so far down as Dacca. Hundreds of square miles of the Ganges delta have become inhabitable only since the days of Clive. The Brahmapootra, which is now a mere chain of ponds at Sylhet in the dry season, was a mile and a half broad in 1785, and, according to the law by which Indian rivers shift their channels westward, the Jennai, then a small stream, has been swollen by the waters of the Brahmapootra into a broad river. Earthquakes also have changed the face of the country, turning dry lands into jheels or lakes as at Chittagong, and diverting the rivers by raising their former beds. The country which contains the sources of the Sone, Nerbudda, and Mahanuddy has been well described by several writers, including Jacquemont, Oldham, and Medlicott, and Dr. Hooker has done the same service for the Kymore Hills overhanging the Nerbudda Valley. This valley has been fully described by Dr. Impey and others. Of Mysore the best description is still that of Dr. Buchanan; the plateau of the Dakhan recalls the labours of Colonel Sykes; while Captain Harris and Sir R. Temple have enlarged our knowledge of the Mahanuddy basin. That of the Godavery was thoroughly examined by Colonel Haig; of the Kistna and the Kavery much may be learned from the reports of Colonel Baird Smith, Majors Anderson and Orr, Colonel Ludlow, and Sir W. Denison.

Various parts of the Dakhan have been described by competent writers. Colonel Sankey's report on Coorg, Mr. Markham's on the Wynaad district and the hill tract between Travancore and Madura; Ouchterlony's description of the Nilgherry and Khoondah Hills, Dr. Cleghorn's of the Anamallays, and the reports of Ward, Beddome, Wight, and Markham on the Pulney Hills, make up a valuable body of instructive details, to which must be added Dr. Buchanan's standard work on Malabar. There is still much room however for extended researches in Western and Southern India, and a connected survey of this part of the country is yet to make.

The first systematic essay in Indian botany was carried out under the auspices of the Dutch Governor of Malabar in the latter part of the seventeenth century. In 1793 Dr. Roxburgh became the first Superintendent of the Botanical Gardens at Calcutta. The publication of his "Plants of Coromandel" was followed after his death by that of his "Flora Indica." His virtual successor, Wallich, a Danish surgeon at Serampore, made very large additions to the collections placed under his charge. He distributed nearly two hundred thousand plants among two thousand gardens, and brought out with the aid of the East India Company a magnificent work on the rarer plants of Asia. After thirty years of useful labour he was succeeded in 1847 by Dr. Falconer, successor to Dr. Royle at Saharunpore. Dr. Griffith, another great Indian botanist, had already amassed a rich store of plants in the course of his travels through Bengal, Burmah, and Afghanistan. Dr. Royle was the first to generalise on the geographical distribution of the Indian flora. Dr. Wight at Madras and Dr. Graham at Bombay made noteworthy contributions to the study of Indian botany. A work of the highest importance and widest scope on the Indian Flora is at length being compiled by Drs. Hooker and Thomson. Four thick volumes will be taken up with the description of twelve thousand species, distributed over eighteen botanical provinces. Curiously enough, India seems to have very few local plants, and "there are few countries in which the vegetation presents so little beauty, or such short seasons of bloom." The Indian Flora bears for the most part a close resemblance to that of tropical Africa. The Punjab is botanically allied to Sindh, which in its turn is the twin brother of Egypt. Eastward of Kemaon the European types rapidly disappear.

To the progress of botanical research India owes the success of recent efforts to remedy the mischief caused by the destruction of her forests. Dr. Cleghorn supplies much useful information in his work on forest conservancy, and Mr. Markham himself looks to the new Cinchona plantations as a means of checking evaporation, regulating drainage, and drawing moisture from passing clouds. He also calls attention to the need for obviating the scarcity of water on the Western Ghats, caused by clearing so many thousands of acres for coffee culture. The physical geography of the Indian seas is a field which has yet to be fully explored; but from what transpired last week at the meeting of the British Association, we may hope to see that work also speedily taken in hand. Of maps illustrating the physical geography of India Mr. Markham gives no very flattering account. Those prepared by Mr. E. Prinsep for the Seealkote district of the Punjab are the best hitherto produced, being "invaluable, as far as they go." Mr. Prinsep has also brought out a very useful map of the Umritsur Division, and a comprehensive series of maps for the whole Punjab. A set of rough but useful maps has also been produced for the Central Provinces. For a thoroughly good set of general and special maps for India we must still look to future enterprise.

Mr. Markham's excellent Memoir winds up with a brief review of work done in the Geographical Department of the India Office, from the time when Richard Hakluyt, as first Geographer to the infant East India Company, drew up reports of "the chief places where sundry sorts of spices do grow, . . . of the prices of precious stones and spices; of what is good to bring from the Indies by him that is skilful and trusty; of certain commodities of good request, gathered out of authors that have lived and trafficked in those parts," and so forth. His labours were largely supplemented, a century and a-half later, by those of Major Rennell, who made good use of the fresh knowledge obtained by later travellers and the officers who accompanied our Indian armies. His services in this field, however valuable, were all unpaid after his return to England; the official hydrographer of that time being his active fellow-worker Dalrymple, sometime member of the Madras Council. Dalrymple's successor, Captain Horsburgh, compiled the famous directory which still guides our countrymen in navigating the Indian seas. Twenty years later Mr. Walker brought out the first sheets of his great Indian Atlas on the scale projected by Aaron Arrowsmith. Besides this great work, which is still to finish, he has brought out other maps of the country, large and small, in a style remarkable for beauty and accuracy. So vast indeed was the work assigned to him, and so scanty the help on which he could rely in his own department, that in 1868 it was arranged that the remainder of the Atlas should be finished and brought out in Calcutta, under the charge of Colonel Thuillier, who returned to India in 1869 with a staff of trained English engravers for that purpose. Meanwhile the acknowledged need for a distinct and well-organised Geographical Department at the India-office led to the appointment of Mr. C. Markham as its future head, with Mr. Trelawney Saunders for his efficient subaltern. Of the services already discharged by these two gentlemen we may form some estimate from the fact that it took Mr. Saunders 165 days, at six hours a-day, to digest the chaos of documents, old, torn, and musty for the most part, out of which his chief has compiled the present Memoir; itself a pretty severe labour of no ordinary love. Of that labour we cannot close this imperfect notice without thanking the author for his successful achievement of a task made all the harder, not only by the richness of the materials, but also by the consequences of past neglect to preserve and utilise existing records.

Passage-money to Subalterns.—The Government of India has authorised the grant of passage-money to subaltern officers proceeding to the Colonies on medical certificate under the Rules of 1854 or 1868, provided that in no case it exceeds the cost of a passage to England, and that they would be entitled to the latter if proceeding to Europe.

LOCAL EXPENDITURE IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—In a former letter I urged that though widespread disaffection would be caused in India by the idea that Government had broken its promise by increasing the Land-tax in Bengal; yet, on the other hand, it would be easy to provide for local expenses, by permitting the taxpayers to rate themselves and to control their own expenditure.

Since her Majesty assumed the Government of India local taxes have often been imposed without any consideration for the amount of expenditure required. In England the practice has been to decide how much money is required, and then to impose a rate accordingly. In India the idea has been, get as much money as you can, and then consider what is to be done with it. Englishmen will scarcely believe the extravagance and waste to which this latter system has given rise. Zealous European officers have their hobbies. Ambitious Englishmen like to bring themselves to the favourable notice of Governors. Useless old stallions are purchased on the crude idea of improving the breed of horses; and bulls, rams, and he-goats are sought for by amateur magistrates who have no idea of good breeding. An abstract of local budgets for twelve years past, with a truthful narrative of the results of expenditure, would fill England with amazement.

How can the natives be expected to be content with taxation when the proceeds are recklessly wasted? Natives are often exceedingly liberal and public-spirited when they have confidence in the District Officer. Throughout India numerous works of public utility have been and are being constructed by them. Substantial bridges, caravanseries, tanks, wells, and hundreds of miles of beautiful avenues of trees attest the willingness of the rich to open their purses whenever and wherever they may be permitted to have a voice in the expenditure, and whenever they may be treated in Committees as reasonable beings, and not as mere puppets to sanction crude propositions at the dictation of the collector.—Your obedient servant,

IRRIGATION.

The Madras Times complains that the Government of India is so engrossed with the importance of cotton cultivation, and the extension of railways, as to have neither money, time, nor inclination to take in hand works of infinitely greater moment for the population at large! We have ceased to assail ourselves with the old reproach that if we left India suddenly we should leave nothing to commemorate our reign except beer bottles, and we have gone into the opposite extreme to sing a pæan of self-glorification on the themes of our railways and cotton trade; but perhaps the one cry is as false as the other; certainly with the broken-down and neglected great irrigation works of the former rulers of India staring us in the face, we have but little to be proud of even with fair dhollera at her best quotation, and trains rushing in all directions over the arid and parched-up soil. Manchester finds her advantages in our cotton cultivation; our railways are of the first moment to our military economists; but whatever benefits the one and the other confer hardly reach the great bulk of the population, for whom irrigation seems the panacea of innumerable woes. To compare our irrigation works with those of the ancient rulers of Hindostan, we may be said to have done little or nothing to meet the great want which India now sighs for in vain. In a few districts we have done something, it is true, at an enormous outlay to remove the reproach we labour under as the rulers of the country; but as yet the great and important question of irrigation for all parts of India where irrigation is practicable has not met with the consideration to which its merits fairly entitle it, nor will it ever receive such consideration, we apprehend, until Governments of India determine to consider the crying necessities of the people from a broad and liberal point of view. Surely, if ever there was a public speculation which would justify the Government of India in borrowing money freely for the construction of Public Works, an extended system of irrigation for India is that speculation? Even under the supervision of the extravagant Department of Public Works, irrigation works have been found remunerative to both State and people; what profit might not be derived from them if constructed with less extravagance, and upon a better and more extended system? In irrigation we have the first principle of Indian agriculture, and yet, mirabile dictu! we observe the Government of India organising an agricultural department before it has accomplished anything noteworthy towards the first necessity of its success. First let us have a department especially devoted to works of irrigation; afterwards one whose business is agriculture, otherwise we shall simply be harnessing the cart before the horse. It may be vulgar and common place to say so, still it strikes us that native agriculturists require water rather than instruction in their occupations; but we hazard the supposition with all modesty, for to urge it is to speak heretically of the intelligence of those Bengalee bureaucrats who have lately taken to farming on a gigantic scale. To parody a couple of lines in the "Ancient Mariner," there is in India—

THE INDIAN CAMP OF EXERCISE.

The Englishman observes that the knowledge of how to handle large masses of troops in the field is not required in England only. The late Duke of Wellington is reported to have said, that if he were to put 50,000 men in Hyde-park, he did not know a general in England who could take them out again with proper military precision and rapidity. We wonder how many generals there are in India who could manœuvre in the field 5,000 men? The want of this knowledge in the commanders of our divisions and brigades is a most serious drawback to the efficiency of our armies wherever placed. Lord Napier of Magdala is, we know, looked upon with rather suspicious eyes from the Financial Department, but his Excellency's desire to have a camp of exercise formed during the winter is one which the Governor-General in Council, it is to be hoped, will support in a liberal manner. This is not a matter to be penny wise and pound foolish about. We are, as we have said, no alarmists or believers in impending danger, but we cannot shut our eyes and ears to the fact acknowledged throughout our army that our generals and colonels are ignorant of moving masses of men of the different arms, because they have had no practice in doing so. It cannot be denied that we ought to have active, intelligent commanders, as well as well-drilled troops; that commanders should understand thoroughly the use of artillery, and that captains of batteries should be able and accustomed to choose their own positions; and it cannot also be denied that this is exactly what we have not. It is quite clear that officers cannot learn how to move large bodies of infantry, cavalry, and artillery without practice, and surely it is the duty of Government to provide and pay for such instruction. We hazard these remarks because rumours are afloat that the cheese-paring policy is likely to be applied to this scheme of the Commander-in-Chief's. It is said that there is a wish to reduce the number of regiments which it is proposed shall form the force, and that the full complement of artillery to infantry will not be allowed. We can hardly believe that if the Government sanctions the scheme at all it will interfere with the details laid down by H.E. the Commander-in-Chief. We do not think that there are any grounds to fear wilful extravagance on the part of H.E. regarding this matter. The project is either necessary or unnecessary. If necessary, and we do not know where the contrary opinion can be held, we think that Lord Napier's requisitions should be met in a broad and liberal manner. The corroding influence of inactivity is eating into the life of the armies in India. In spite of Sir William Mansfield's Council Chamber and post-prandial boasts regarding the perfect state of discipline and efficiency in which, he assured his hearers, he left the armies of India to his successor, military men who knew the real state of affairs did not hesitate to express an opposite conviction. Insubordination and ignorance have not yet been weeded out, and we believe that there are many other shortcomings which have fallen to the lot of Lord Napier of Magdala to amend, if he can. His idea of a camp of exercise is one that shows he is practical and in earnest in his wish to make the army as efficient as it can be; and it is to be hoped that in so good an endeavour his hands will be strengthened, and not tied, by the Supreme Government.

Arrivals—Leave, Officers.—Commanding officers of British regiments are directed to furnish officers proceeding to England with a copy, in duplicate, of the general order or authority under which they are permitted to go home on private affairs; in the case of leave on medical certificate it will be the duty of the staff officer at the port of embarkation to furnish a copy of the requisite order. The Governor-general in Council has ruled that a military officer in civil employ who overstays privilege leave shall forfeit all his pay, military and civil, for the period of overstay.

Pay and Allowances.—Staff.—The following extract of a letter from the officiating deputy secretary to the Government of India in the military department to the secretary to the Government of Bombay, military department, No. 172, dated June 8, is published for general information:—"With reference to the question raised in your letter No. 1811, of April 28, I am directed to acquaint you, for the information of the Right Hon. the Governor in Council, that the Right Hon. the Governor-general of India in Council is pleased to rule that an officer on the expiration of his tour of service, unavoidably detained till the departure of the earliest troopship after the date of expiry of the term of his service, is entitled to receive his Indian pay and allowances up to the date of embarkation."

LEGISLATIVE.

At the meeting of the Council of the Governor-General, on Tuesday, 20th June, at Simlah, his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab moved to consider the report of the select committee on the Bill to provide for the levy of local rates in the Punjab. He would not go into the specific amendments introduced into the Bill by the committee, as they were matters of detail, but he thought that they had very much improved the Bill. The principle of the Bill was simple and spoke for itself. The objections raised to it were of two kinds,—one class of objections was prompted by the anxiety felt at a Bill involving so large a demand in excess of the land-tax being passed with such ease and rapidity, but he was well convinced that the prosperity of the agricultural classes was such that this additional burden could easily be borne. A second class of objections was suggested by the fear that the new rates imposed by the Bill would act as an encroachment on the land-revenue. This brought up the whole question of the adequacy of the revised assessments. He was not in a position to say whether these revised assessments were adequate or not. The whole matter had been for a long while under discussion. In a letter dated Aug. 27, 1870, his lamented predecessor had issued instructions to the Financial Commissioner for the purpose of ascertaining whether the system of assessment introduced by Mr. Prinsep involved a loss of revenue. The Financial Commissioner's reply to this inquiry had not yet been received; but it would, his honour believed, be generally felt to be satisfactory that the matter rested in the hands of so skilled and experienced an officer as Mr. Egerton, who had personal acquaintance as a settlement official with several districts in the Punjab. Further instructions had been subsequently issued by himself (his Honour) to Mr. Prinsep, and the whole subject was being subjected to a thorough investigation. He had made these remarks in order to show that he considered the anxiety which had been felt and expressed on this subject to be perfectly reasonable, and he entirely concurred in the propriety of a careful and thorough inquiry.

The Hon. Mr. Stephen said that he had no intention of raising a discussion on that occasion on a subject of such importance and difficulty as that to which his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor had referred. It would be improper and inconvenient to do so; but he would call attention to a single point. In the speech to which the Council had listened with so much pleasure when the present Bill was introduced his Honour had said—

> There is a general agreement that the people of the Punjab, though quite as averse from all taxation as their neighbours, will more readily acquiesce in the imposition of a light rate on the land than in any other demand, for it is in accordance with their remembrance of old times, with their customs and usages, and with the immemorial practice of former rulers.

His Honour went on to say that though the rate was equivalent to six per cent. on the land-revenue, yet such was the "unprecedented prosperity" of all classes connected with the soil, that he was able confidently to affirm their ability to bear additional taxation; and he referred to the fact that, while population had increased only in the ratio of 11½, cultivation had increased 31½ per cent., and to the greatly enhanced prices obtainable by sale of land, as proofs of the soundness of the view that the agricultural population of the Province could sustain without injury the rate to be imposed by the Bill. Now, upon this he (Mr. Stephen) had one remark to offer. If there was this great increase of agriculture, if the price of land had so largely increased, if the imposition of rates on land was a popular, customary, and congenial form of taxation, if all these facts were established on an authority so unquestionable as that of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, one of two things must result; either land-revenue ought to have largely increased, or some full explanation of the reason of its not having done so ought to be forthcoming.

The Hon. Sir Richard Temple said that he entirely concurred in the remarks made by his hon. friend, Mr. Stephen, as to the alleged loss of revenue involved from the continuance of old rates under expired settlements. He could only repeat what he had said when the Budget was under discussion, namely, that the undertaking of new settlements was entirely a matter for the discretion of the local Government, and that, whenever any well-considered scheme for fresh settlements was submitted to the Government of India, it was favourably received and attentively considered.

PARISNATH.

The following is abridged from the Englishman:—Most of us know, or have heard, that there is a hill called Parisnáth, of an elevation greater than that of Sabáthú, and not 2,000 feet less than that of Massúri, within easy reach of Calcutta. We have been told that we can dine one night in a Calcutta furnace, and can take tiffin the next day in a climate resembling that of the Welsh hills. . . . . I shall show how, for an inclusive outlay of Rs. 100, and at the cost of five days' absence from work (for one day of the week happened to be a close holiday), I was able to enjoy a week of mountain air and mountain scenery, free from the heat and insects and general fustiness of the Calcutta hot-weather—to walk about in the open air with pleasure in cloth clothes in the first week of June—to come back to work in rude health, with a liver wagging as of old in England, and with a countenance on which the ruddy "livery of the burnished sun" had taken the place of the regulation pallor of the Calcutta drawing-room. I went merely out of curiosity to see the place; I stayed to enjoy it.

Parisnáth has more than once emerged from its embryo state as a sanitarium; and at one time, when it was occupied by troops, it appeared likely to maintain its position as an established summering station. As long ago as 1846 the Executive Engineer on this portion of the Grand Trunk Road examined the place and wrote:—"In May I found the transition from the plains to the hill-top a delicious one." The idea was allowed to sleep for twelve years; and then in 1858 Major Maxwell, Superintending Engineer, was sent to make his report. He said:—"Within the past few years I have seen something of hill-stations, and their wants for the residents of Europeans, and I feel convinced that Parisnáth has only to become known to us to be a suitable, delightful, and healthy spot to retire to." Dr. Oldham (Superintendent of the Geological Survey), Dr. Thompson, W. Atkinson, Esq. (then secretary to the Asiatic Society), Captain Young (Officiating Chief Engineer), and many other thoroughly competent authorities, successively reported on the advantages of the hill as "a relief from the broiling heats of Calcutta." The Lieutenant-Governor visited the place for a couple of days in 1860; in 1861 he resided there for more than two months, and stated his belief that the pleasant nature of the climate and the salubrity of Parisnáth were placed beyond a doubt by his own personal experience, "proving that the temperature averages, in the afternoon, during the seven hot months of the year, sixteen degrees lower than in the plains at the foot." Finally, in 1860 the Government of [illegible] formally sanctioned the establishment of a military sanitarium at Parisnáth; the barracks and officers' quarters were built, which now form the hotel, troops were sent up, and prospered there. In 1868 the place was abandoned by the military authorities on the ground of a deficient supply of water, and about the same time a new spring of excellent water was discovered very near the buildings, sufficient alone to supply a large number of men! . . . We fall asleep before reaching Bardwan, and are awakened at Raniganj to prepare for changing carriages at Sitarampur (two stations beyond Raniganj), whence a run of about twenty minutes brings us to the Burrakur Station. The early morning feels cold and raw, as about four A.M. we get into our dak-gari, which is piled up with our baggage and our baskets of provisions. On several sides of us we can see the dim outlines of small isolated hog-backed hills, reminding one forcibly of the general appearance of the Wreking at home,—a pleasant sight after the monotonous plains of Bengal. The giant form of Parisnath is, as I afterwards found out, visible in the distance—forty-eight miles as the crow flies; but the light is not yet sufficient for us to be able to discern it. From the station to the foot of the hill our route lies along the Grand Trunk Road. After a drive of about half a mile we cross the Barrakur by the splendid new bridge (opened only a few months ago) which has been building ever since 1854-55; and from this point, or a little further, the road rises at every step. About two miles from the station is the excellent Taldangah dak bungalow; many visitors to Parisnath will doubtless prefer to remain here until the evening, and take another night for the dak-journey. We, however, push on, taking our chota hazari and breakfast successively without stopping the gári. The country about here is called by Mr. Long the Switzerland of Bengal. He writes about it:—"To the west lies an iron and coal-field; the views are fine, and one feels he has left swampy Bengal; the air blows fresh and invigorating; no more swamps; quartz rocks and hills present themselves to the sight, and the roads are mended with kankar, a nodular deposit of limestone." A few miles beyond Taldangah we come to a district of primary rocks, where the roads are mended with quartz and granite, reminding me, a Devonian, of the beautiful granite-made roads of my native Dartmoor. The general aspect, too, of the country, rising and falling in immense undulations, forcibly recalls the Devonshire moors, but instead of the heather, we find an undergrowth of thorny bushes of Zizyphus, and abundance of lac is here collected from the twigs of the butea frondosa. The dak-bungalow of Gobindpur is a half-way house between Burrakur and Parisnáth. The road becomes more and more picturesque; and for the last ten miles, after passing the dák-bungalow at Top-Chansi, it winds and curves round the base of the mountain, which offers new and more beautiful views at every turn. We arrive at Nimya-Ghát, the place from which the ascent is made, at about 2 P.M.; here there is a capital dák-bungalow belonging to the proprietor of the Parisnáth Hotel, where we find our jampans or "dandies" awaiting us. Nimya Ghát is itself considerably more than a thousand feet above the level of the sea; and the air (though the afternoon of our arrival, May 28th, is an intensely hot one—the thermometer which we have brought with us just touching 90 deg. about 3 P.M.) seems to be fresher and purer than that to which we have been accustomed. We get a bath and some tiffin, and at about a quarter to five we begin to ascend the hill; by the time we reach the top, at half-past seven, the thermometer has fallen to 74 deg.

The Ascent.

Most of my readers will know what a "dandy" is; but for those who do not I may describe it as a small hammock of sackcloth slung under a big bamboo. As there is nothing overhead but the pole, there is an uncomfortable sensation of exposure to the sun and weather. The path is a zig zag up the western face of the mountain; and the almost horizontal rays of the setting sun are unpleasantly powerful if the ascent be made in the afternoon, as in our case. The path is at first wide and easy, but it soon becomes steep and narrow, and the air becomes clearer and brighter at every step. The change of atmospheric condition rapidly produces its effect on one's physical energies; we soon find the repose of the "dandy" unendurable, and get out to make part of the ascent on foot.

Parisnáth is the Sinai of the Jains, and as any destruction of life, vegetable or animal, is abhorred by them, the growth of timber on the hill is very fine. About two-thirds of the way up the change in the character of the vegetation is clearly perceptible, tropical plants giving place to those of a more temperate region. Throughout the whole of the ascent the creepers are especially fine, often covering a score of lofty trees under one rich mantle of foliage and flowers. At one place our dandy-bearers halt to drink water from a clear spring that gushes out from the side of the mountain; its site is very beautiful, in the recess of a leafy amphitheatre, overgrown with a profusion of the most graceful ferns, mosses, and flowering shrubs.

We reach the summit in exactly twenty-two hours and a-half from Calcutta, of which nearly three hours had been spent in the dák-bungalow at the foot of the hill. Regnar Lodbrok.

STATION TALK.

Bhurtpore, June 29.—There has been a continual downpour of rain here for the last three days, and to all present appearances it is likely to continue for some time longer. Captain Bradford, Political Agent at Jeypore, and Captain Cadell, v.c., Political Agent at Ulwar, arrived here on the 27th, and left yesterday for Agra, in company with Captain Paulet, the Agent here, under the usual salutes. Rumour is current that the object of their assembling at Agra is to decide relative to the removal of the misguided Maharajah of Ulwur to Benares, to which city it is the intention of Government to remove him for some time to see if reform cannot be brought about. His Highness the Maharajah of Bhurtpore is expected from Deig to-day, and after a short rest of two hours leaves for Agra en route for Benares.

Mynpoorie, June 25.—We have had easterly wind, with its moisture and dust, blowing since the 24th current, and occasional gatherings of clouds, but no rain, the wind dispersing the clouds as they accumulate. The easterly wind is said not to be salubrious. Last evening we had an immense gathering of clouds, but all passed away, followed by bright moonlight. The temperature has fallen some ten degrees lower than what it was a week previous; this morning it was 85 deg. at 6 A.M. Lately two cases of throat cutting have been admitted into the dispensary—one a female, the other a male. The former sustained very little or no injury, only a slight cut. The latter is of a rather serious form, but no wounding of great blood-vessels. They both attempted to commit suicide, but were caught at the time of performance.

Mirzapore, June 26.—We have a fair prospect of enjoying the benefits of a literary society in this station. The Deputy Collector, Pundit Radha Kissen, and Sub-Assistant Surgeon Anundchunder Mookerje, have been for months past exerting themselves, but with disappointment, not obtaining the countenance of the residents in furtherance of their laudable object. Perseverance is not altogether unproductive of fruits. Time appears to have come to their aid. The magistrate, Mr. Simpson, has offered a helping hand in support of the project. A preliminary meeting of respectable natives was called in the Government school premises the day before yesterday, for the purpose of taking up the subject publicly. The meeting was fairly attended. Among those present were Mahunt Goyramjee and other respectable Mahajuns and Government native officials. The subject was well handled by the Deputy Collector; the address was very impressive. Those present seemed to appreciate the object of the meeting. Unanimous consent was given to the proposal for inaugurating the Society. The meeting appointed a sub-committee for the purpose of preparing a set of rules for the working of the institution. The weather is pleasant; we have had showers lately. The atmosphere is scarcely ever clear of clouds; rarely a day passes without a heavy or light shower of rain. The crops are thriving, to the great satisfaction of cultivators. The Ganges is much swollen; the market is dull; station healthy.

Hills North of Deyrah, June 26.—News it would be, were I but able to write, that we had no rain and were basking in sunshine; but alas! it never ceases to come down day or night. Owing to the continued spell of such disagreeable weather, visitors are naturally disgusted, but they must just live in the hope of an early break-up. The private theatricals announced were, I am told, a great success. Visitors up here appear at present to be acting mad; one hears of theatricals at the east-end, then again at the west, and rehearsals in every quarter. A marriage on the 28th; only another of the fifty to be celebrated this season. On Friday the minstrels appear again soliciting the patronage of the public in behalf of "Minnie," for whose benefit they purpose performing. A bumper house is hoped for. Report has it that before long we shall have the rail running up to Rajpore; if true, what a glorious future for Mussoorie! How valuable every inch of ground at Deyrah, Rajpore, and Mussoorie will become! No more untenanted abodes, but increased accommodation will be required, as the attraction will then far surpass what it is now. Government have at last sanctioned the volunteer movement and given it their hearty approval. The organisation of the corps will now be proceeded with, so that ere long it will form one of the permanent institutions of Mussoorie.

SIMLA, June 26.—The Lady Mayo Institute (erst Tytler's Christian Orphanage) was opened in due form on Saturday. It was a miserable day, but there were about a hundred and thirty persons present. The Viceroy and Lady Mayo were present, and his lordship opened the Institute with a humourous speech, in which he alluded to the funds of the Institution, in which he stated there was a deficit, which he found was generally rather a happy state of things with charitable institutions, as it enabled the managers to appeal to the feelings of the public for assistance. There was a fancy fair, some good music, a flower show, &c., on the grounds. But the gathering was nothing so great as was anticipated, and the weather put a damper on the whole. During Friday night some young scamps who had been having a carouse at a party turned out intent on skylarking, and from the band stand to the centre of the bazaar were visible signs of their handiwork in the demolition of Municipality sign-boards, the removal of tradesmen's boards and the destruction of railings. The delinquents were not discovered. It is believed that they have left the station. The weather has been a source of general talk. It rained throughout Wednesday night, a good portion of Thursday, the whole of Friday, a part of Saturday, the whole of that night, and the whole of Sunday, heavily. At one church in the morning there were only four persons at the service, at the other church somewhere about the same; in the evening there were thirty-five at the Union Church, owing probably to the fact of the Rev. Mr. Williamson, from Allahabad, having to preach, which induced some to brave the wet and damp to have the pleasure of hearing a minister so much liked. Mr. Williamson did not disappoint the congregation, his sermon being an excellent one. It was mentioned in one of my previous letters among the deaths of several that of Mr. Goddard, the steward of the club. I am happy to say that a subscription has been got up by those who knew the deceased, and that the amount realised is Rs. 2,000; a very respectable sum, which is to be appropriated in the education of the three children which he left. It was at first proposed to send them to Colonel Tytler's Orphanage, but this was overruled, and I believe they will be sent to the Mission school at Kotegurh. There is no end to the complaints by tenants of leaks in their houses from the late rains; even the best and newest of houses have suffered; the heavy downpour has tried all roofs and found all "wanting."—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

PUNISHMENT FOR SUTTEE.—Several persons who took part in a suttee (widow self-cremation) case at Ghazeepore have been tried and sentenced by the Sessions Court. Two sons-in-law in the suttee were sentenced to five years' imprisonment, and the prohit, or priest, who performed the religious observances for her, to imprisonment for four years. The priest's sister turned Queen's evidence.

LORD MAYO.—Rumour has it, according to the Delhi Gazette, that the Viceroy is contemplating a Grand Durbar during the next cold season. There is still some doubt as to the best locality. Our contemporary says:—"Since the Viceroy went to Ajmere last year, the Chiefs must come this way on the next occasion. We have heard it said that Simla may be selected, but it is hard to believe that Allahabad will have been washed away within the next month, so that Agra it must be."

RESPECT FOR THE RULING POWERS.—A ruffianly European, pretending to be an excise officer, bullied a poor spirit seller and drank a pan of his toddy. On his refusing to pay, the toddy-seller made inquiries from others, and next day lodged a charge against him of false personation. The crime was proved, and then the magistrate advised the toddy-seller to enter a charge of theft. The reply was remarkable—"The prisoner," said the toddy-seller, "is a topiwalla, a Christian, one of the reigning class. I would not have him disgraced."

INDIA A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.—On Friday evening last a numerous audience assembled at the Dalhousie Institute, Calcutta, to hear Dr. Chevers's lecture, entitled "A Hundred Years Ago." The lecture was exceedingly interesting, and was listened to throughout with the greatest attention. It would be impossible to give within the limited space at our disposal anything like a sketch of the vast area traversed by the learned lecturer in dealing with the events taking place in this and other countries a hundred years ago. But we may state shortly that Dr. Chevers drew a picture of Calcutta as it existed in 1770, and gave a spirited sketch of what doubtless were the habits of good society in those olden times. The notion of what in the days of Hastings and Francis constituted a "gentleman" may be gathered from the recorded opinion of the accomplished Colonel Thomas Deane Pearce, who was second to Mr. Hastings in his duel with Francis. This was quoted by the able lecturer, and it may not be out of place to insert part of it here:—"To be a gentleman you must learn to drink by all means. A man is honoured in proportion to the number of bottles he can drink. Keep a dozen dogs, but in particular if you have not the least use for them, and hate hunting and shooting, four horses may barely suffice, but if you have eight and seven of them are too vicious for the syce to feed, it will be much better. By no means let the horses be paid for, and have a palanquin covered with silver trappings; get Rs. 10,000 in debt, but 20,000 would make you an honester man, especially if you are convinced that you will never have the power to pay." Passing from India to England, Dr. Chevers pictured the perils of the voyage via the Cape, sketched some of the dangers (after arriving in England) incident to travelling on the way to London, and other annoyances when they arrived at the great city.—Indian Daily News, July 1.

STATION TALK.

BHOWNUGGUR, June 27.—At the end of last month we had three or four days of most severe weather—wind, rain, and hail, which seemed like the monsoon arriving by mistake a month too early. The hot weather, however, returned so intensely, and the usual change of weather was so much delayed, that I, for one, was converted to the opposite opinion, that the "rains" had lost their way and were en route to the North Pole via Affghanistan. For two or three days, however, affairs have resumed their normal aspect, and the customary cloudy skies and drizzle of the season now prevail, though the rain has not been violent. Mr. Percival has returned from his tour in the districts, and the young Rajah has departed for Rajkote. The new hospital, which I some time ago noticed as a very pretty addition to the architecture of the place, has been opened, and a plan for supplying the city with water is now being carried out. This improvement is very urgently needed, as the present supply, besides being very scant in the hot weather, is most deleterious in quality. The rains will probably cause the suspension of the works, but we hope to enjoy their advantages next hot season.

KURRACHEE, June 24.—The natives of Hydrabad appear to have entered into a conspiracy to annoy the gallant commandant of her Majesty's 1st Belooch Regiment. Colonel Beville detests to see a civilian ape the soldier. He has more than once warned the natives not to appear in public in the uniform coats of his men. He has even proclaimed, by beat of tom-tom, to the inhabitants of the town of Hydrabad, that those found using such coats will be dealt with according to law. But the Sindees seem to think they know law better than the colonel, and so, in defiance of his warnings, in defiance of his proclamations, they continue to wear the cast-off uniforms of the 1st Beloochees, and strut about the streets of the city like so many peacocks in borrowed feathers. Not long since a mild-looking bheestie had the temerity to pass the colonel in a uniform coat with full facings. Astounded at the impudence of the fellow, the colonel laid a charge against him before the city magistrate under Sec. 140 of the Penal Code. On the day the accused was brought to the Court he humbly confessed that "he did wear the coat," and said that "it was given to him by his master." The magistrate, thereupon, imposed a small fine upon him by way of punishment, and warned him to be careful in future. A few days after the conviction, however, the judge of the Court of session discovered that the magistrate's sentence was illegal, and so referred the whole of the proceedings in the case for the orders of the High Court of the province. I subjoin Mr. Pinhey's judgment:—"There can be no question about the unsoundness of the conviction in this case, as remarked by the Session judge. The intention with which the accused wore the coat is the essence of the charge. There can be no doubt that the accused never had any intention of causing it to be believed that he was a soldier in the military service of the Queen. Accused, who is a bheestie, while admitting that he wore the coat, stated that he wore it because it had been given to him by his master, and that he was not aware that he ought to have taken the facings off the coat before he wore it. I observe that Lieutenant-Colonel Beville, C.B., the officer commanding H.M.'s 1st Belooch regiment,—the chief witness in the case—stated that he saw the accused wearing a uniform coat of the regiment under his command, with its full facings, and added, 'this is continually made known over and over again in the city of Hydrabad, that no such coats should be used with the facings, and that those who were found using them were duly punished.' Colonel Beville may be quite correct in stating that such proclamations are made in the city of Hydrabad. But if they are made, they are made on an erroneous assumption of the consequences of persons wearing uniform coats with facings. Persons are not punished for merely wearing uniform coats with facings, if they do so without intending to personate soldiers. The Suddur Court is now on circuit, and some half dozen of the tent-pitchers and other attendants of the Court protect themselves from the cold by wearing cast-off uniforms with full facings—possibly uniforms of the very regiment which Colonel Beville commands, and at the head of which he has performed distinguished service. It is quite intelligible that Colonel Beville may object to civilians wearing the cast-off coats of his regiment with full facings, but while these coats are allowed to be sold with full facings, it is not likely that civil purchasers will cut off the facings after purchase, and run the risk of cutting off some of the cloth of the coats with the facings. I am surprised that so careful and painstaking a magistrate as Mr. Paroomul Khoobchund recorded a conviction in this case. He apparently considered the evidence of Colonel Beville as sufficient to settle the law applicable to the case. Whereas it was the duty of the magistrate to determine the law applicable to the case for himself, and as the law which he applied was a penal one he was further bound to interpret it strictly. . . . Under the provisions of section 404 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I reverse the conviction and sentence recorded by the magistrate against the accused, Ali Bux Jumo, and I direct that the amount of fine recovered from him be refunded." It is said that since the delivery of the judgment people of Master Ali Bux Jumo's class have grown bolder at Hydrabad, and affect quite a martial bearing when they meet a Belooch soldier. Last Thursday a Parsee lady was deprived of the whole of her goods, gods and chattels while she was out on a visit to a friend's, and yesterday a Sindee, in broad daylight, with the greatest nonchalance imaginable, robbed a girl of all the ornaments she had on her person. The Sind papers have written articles usque ad nauseam crying down the decking of children with jewellery; but the natives worship long-established customs, and if crime increased a dozen-fold, we should still find native fathers and mothers covering their little ones with all sorts of silver, gold, and other precious ornaments.—Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

Military.—Regarding H.M.'s 56th Regiment and under-aged soldiers, the Deccan Herald says:—"These young men amount to hundreds in this regiment. Some of them are as young as seventeen years of age. No wonder that they should suffer on their arrival in India, especially as they are raw recruits, and have all the fatigue of constant and regular drill. Moreover, they arrived in this country in April—the hottest month of the year in Poona. It is to be hoped that Government, through its military authorities, may do all it can to save from the effects of coming to India at this early age. The regiment ought to be kept three years in Poona until the youngest soldiers in it arrive at the age of twenty."

Hindoo, Mahomedan, and Indian Law.—The Council of Legal Education have approved the following rules for the examination of the students proposing to be called to the Bar with a view to residence in India. The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—"That not more than four terms, under any circumstances, be dispensed with in favour of students coming from India or the colonies with a view to return to residence there, and that it is not expedient to dispense with any terms for such students, except on the following conditions, viz.:—'1. That students from India do satisfactorily pass an examination in Hindoo and Mahomedan Law, the Indian Penal Code, the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Code of Civil Procedure, the Indian Succession Act, and in such other Codes and Acts as may from time to time become law in British India; and, in addition to such examination, do pass such examinations and abide by all such rules and regulations as are now in force for students seeking a pass certificate by examination for call to the Bar. 2. That students from the colonies do pass such an examination as is required, and do abide by all such rules and regulations as are now in force, in order to obtain a certificate of honour. 3. Provided that each of the four Inns of Court be at liberty to dispense with the above conditions in such very special circumstances as they may think fit, and that such circumstances be stated in the certificate of call to the Bar given to every such student. The Benchers of each Inn, subject to the foregoing limitations, will be guided, in the dispensation of Terms, by the circumstances of each particular case." Rules for the Examination of the Candidates.—An examination will be held in next Michaelmas Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court will be admissible. Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name in the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Saturday, the 21st day of October next. The examination will commence on Friday, the 27th day of October next, and will be continued on the Saturday following. It will take place in the hall of Lincoln's-inn, and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination. The examination will be conducted in the following order:—Friday morning, the 27th of October, at 10, on Hindoo Law; in the afternoon, at 2, on Mahomedan Law. Saturday morning, the 28th of October, at 10, on the Penal Code and Criminal Procedure Code; in the afternoon, at 2, on the Civil Procedure Code and the Indian Successions Act. The oral examination on Hindoo Law will be conducted in the forenoon of Friday, the 27th of October, and the oral examination on Mahomedan Law in the afternoon of the same day. The oral examination on the Penal Code and Criminal Procedure Code will be conducted in the forenoon of Saturday, the 28th of October, and the oral examination on the Civil Procedure Code and Succession Act in the afternoon of the same day. The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students. The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the following books:—I. Hindoo Law.—Treatises on the Hindoo Law of Inheritance; Menu's Institutes. II. Mahomedan Law.—Treatises on Mahomedan Law. Hedayah. Title, "Sale." III. The Laws in force in British India.—Intestacy and Testamentary Act; Civil Procedure Code; Penal Code; Code of Criminal Procedure; Field's Law of Evidence, Act II. of 1855. Act XXV. of 1861, and Act XIV. of 1859. Field's Indian Statute Book. Title, "Introduction."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

Commissionership of Ajmere.

No. 1,004.—With reference to the notification in the legislative department, dated Simla, May 27, 1870, publishing, for general information, Act XXXIII. Victoria, chapter 3 (an Act to make better provision for making laws and regulations for certain parts of India, and for certain other purposes relating thereto), H.E. the Viceroy and Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to direct that the following copy of a resolution, passed by the Secretary of State for India in Council, be published for general information:—

India Office, London, March 16, 1871.

Resolved that the proposal of the Govt. of India that the provisions of Act XXXIII. Victoria, chapter 3, be extended to the districts known as Ajmere and Mhairwarra, be approved.

No. 1,007.—Under the provisions of section 3 of Acts XVII. and XVIII. Victoria, chapter 77, H.E. the Viceroy and Governor gen. in Council is pleased to take under his immediate authority and management the Commissionership of Ajmere, comprising the Ajmere district, the Mhairwarra pergunnahs of Beawur, Jak, Shamghur, Bebar-Burkocha, Bhoelan, Todghur, Dewair Saroth, Chang, and Kot-Kurana; and to give the following orders respecting the administration thereof. The aforesaid district and pergunnahs are constituted into a chief commissionership, entitled the Chief Commissionership of Ajmere, under the general control of the Govt. of India in the foreign department, with effect from April 1, 1871.

The agent to the Gov. gen. in Rajpootana shall be ex-officio chief commissioner. He will also exercise the powers of judicial commissioner and financial commissioner.

Lieutenant Colonels.

No. 476.—The Right Hon. the Governor General in Council is pleased to publish, for general information, the following extract from a despatch dated April 20, 1871, received from her Majesty's Secretary of State for India:—

. . . . . .

3. "The correspondence has, however, drawn my attention to the disadvantage at which a lieutenant colonel of the infantry or cavalry is placed on promotion to the rank of major general, as compared with other unattached lieutenant colonels, by being deprived of his tentage allowance.

4. "Formerly the number of regimental lieutenant colonels being limited to the number of regiments, an officer of that rank, on becoming limited to the number of regiments, an officer of that rank, on becoming a major general, was removed from his regiment and placed on unemployed pay; and with the rare exception of an officer being deprived of his command for misconduct, these were the only regimental lieutenant colonels unemployed, and thus relieved from the necessity of maintaining camp equipage.

5. "At present, however, the system is different. Practically a large number of lieutenant colonels are unemployed, although they are available for general duty; and it is an anomaly that such officers should be placed in a better position than those who have attained the army rank of major general by rapid promotion for distinguished service.

6. "I have accordingly decided that for the future a regimental lieut. col. of cavalry or infantry, who is a general officer, shall be granted the same pay and allowances in India as he would receive if he had not attained that rank in the army, and at the same time held no appointment. On furlough he will be granted the half of his pay and allowances, with the exception of horse allowance; and, at the expiration of the period during which he is entitled to furlough, he will receive the unemployed furlough pay of a general officer."

In accordance with the foregoing, H.E. in Council notifies that, for the future, a regimental lieut. col. of cavalry or infantry, who is a general officer, shall be granted the same pay and allowances in India as he would receive if he had not attained that rank in the army, and at the same time held no appointment. On furlough he will be granted the half of his pay and allowances, with the exception of horse allowance; and, at the expiration of the period during which he is entitled to furlough, he will receive the unemployed furlough pay of a general officer.

Discipline.

Head Quarters Camp, April 27.—The C. in C. is pleased to direct the publication of the following extract of a letter from the Secretary of State for India, received with military department docket, No. 404, of April 11, for the information and guidance of paymasters of British corps serving in India:—

Extract paras. 5 to 7, Military Letter from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, No. 55, dated Feb. 23, 1871.

"Para. 5. The Secretary of State for War has informed me that it has been brought to his notice that the paymaster of H.M.'s has been, under the orders of his commanding officer, appointed custodian of certain regimental funds, in contravention of para. 305,* page 76 of the Queen's regulations of Jan. 1, 1868.

"6. Inconvenience having been found to result from such a practice, Mr. Cardwell has suggested that the attention of officers commanding regiments serving in India should be directed to the para. of the regulations quoted, with a view to a discontinuance of the practice.

"7. I request you will give such instructions as may be necessary on this subject."

Pay.

Head Quarters, Simla, May 5.—H.E. the C. in C. is pleased to direct the republication of G.O. Queen's Troops, Simla, May 6, 1862, for information and guidance:—

"The C. in C. regrets to find that notwithstanding the prohibition contained in G.O. H.M.'s Forces in India, dated Oct. 21, 1848, and the distinct instructions in H.M.'s Regulations for the Army, officers commanding troops and companies have, in many instances, neglected these orders, and have entrusted to their pay sergeants sums of money greatly in access of the requirements of the service, and what is sanctioned by regulations, thus imposing on the sergeant duties and responsibilities belonging to the officer, and for which the officer receives a pecuniary allowance.

"The C. in C. cannot too strongly condemn this practice, and the strict attention of all officers is called to the standing orders of the service, a disobedience of which H.E. will not allow to be committed with impunity.

"Instances have also occurred of misappropriation of money entrusted by soldiers to non-commissioned officers for deposit in the Savings' Bank."

Loan of Public Works Officers to Native States.

May 19.—No. 201.—The following resolution in the Public Works Department is published for general information:—

Principles to be observed in lending the services of Public Works officers to Native States.

Resolution.—The Governor-general in Council having considered the resolution above referred to in relation to the particular case of Lieutenant ———, and the general questions raised as to the position of Public Works officers employed in Native States, has come to the following conclusions:—

2. As a general practice, the Native State to whom an officer is lent should pay the whole allowances of such officer. But cases in which it may seem desirable that a portion of the salary should be paid by the British Government, might be referred to the Government of India for consideration in the Public Works Department in communication with the Foreign Department. If it is decided that the British Government shall pay any part of the salary, such payment should probably be a charge against the Political Department, his employment being rather based on political grounds than on any advantage which might properly be charged to the Public Works Grant.

3. An officer of the Public Works Department made over for employment under a native State would not be subject to the usual departmental control of superintending or chief engineers, or to the precise rules and regulations of the Public Works Code. His proceedings should be regulated, and the works on which he is employed should be undertaken in communication with the local political officers, under any general or special rules that may be thought suitable either by the superior political officer or the Foreign Department of the Government of India. He should not be required to submit his plans and estimates to any superior officer in the department before commencing work, but a chief or superintending engineer, or other senior officer of the Public Works Department, may usefully, under the directions of the head of the local Government or Administration, make periodical visits of inspection to his works and office, to report upon the qualifications of the officer, and the manner in which he discharges his duties. On these occasions the officer would lay before the inspecting officer his plans, estimates, and accounts, and would, if required, accompany him to the works, and afford all the information he may be called upon to give.

4. The officer employed by the native State would, on his part, submit a full annual report to the head of the local Government or Administration, or chief political officer who controls the political relations of the native State, through the local political officer, of the work executed by him, the rates at which it has been done, and all important particulars connected therewith.

5. While an officer is so employed by a native State he would be borne on the Imperial lists as a supernumerary. His claims to promotion would be determined from time to time on a consideration of the reports of the inspecting officer, and those submitted by the officer himself; and when he is considered by the chief authority under whose control he is placed deserving of promotion, a recommendation should be submitted to the Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department, with a distinct statement of the willingness, or otherwise, of the Durbar to incur any increased charge involved by such promotion. The case would then be decided on, with general reference to the rate of promotion in the Public Works Department, and in communication with the Foreign Department. Any exceptional rate of remuneration given by the Durbar could not in any way be taken into consideration as influencing the officer's promotion or his grade when he reverts to the Public Works Department.

6. No officer will be lent to a native State unless he has passed the examination in Hindustani according to the departmental standard. (Public Works Code II., iv., 22.) The remuneration for passing in the languages should be borne by the Imperial Public Works Department.

7. An officer lent to a native State, on reverting to the Public Works Department, will re-enter in the grade to which he may have attained, and will fill a vacancy, if any exist, or, if not, will continue to be borne as a supernumerary until a vacancy occurs, when he will be absorbed.

Commission on the Lawrence Asylums.

H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to appoint the undermentioned officers to form a Commission to take into consideration certain points connected with the present state and constitution of the several Lawrence Asylums in India:—

President.—Major gen. A. Huyshe, R.A., insp. gen. of arty. for India.

Members.—Dr. W. M. Muir, C.B., insp. gen. of hospitals, British Medical Service; Col. the Hon. F. A. Thesiger, C.B., A.D.C. to the Queen, adjt. gen.; Col. R. Hume, C.B., H.M.'s 55th regt.; Lieut. col. A. B. Johnson, asst. sec., military dept.; A. J. Lawrence, Esq., C.S.

Surgeon J. M. Cunningham, M.D., sanitary comr.

The Commission will assemble at Simla, and will conduct its proceedings under instructions which will be communicated to the President by the Secretary to the Govt. of India in the military department.

As Rule No. 73 of the Bengal Military Orphan Society, under which full subscription is paid by subscribers proceeding to Europe on furlough on private affairs with or without pay, does not meet the case of officers on duty in Europe with their regiments, the Right Hon. the Sec. of State for India in Council has sanctioned the following modification of it, which will have retrospective effect from Jan. 1 last:—

Rule 73.—Subscribers proceeding on furlough with or without pay are bound to continue their subscriptions and contributions in the full proportion of their respective ranks so long as they remain on the effective strength of the army or invalid establishment. But the privilege allowed by the rules to subscribers on furlough on sick leave only of paying the half subscription is extended to all officers below the rank of colonel doing duty out of India in receipt of English pay.

Civil Service Examination—Native Competition.

Simla, June 16.—No. 2,956.—The following despatch from her Majesty's Secretary of State for India is published:—

Dated March 8, 1871.

From T. Walrond, Esq., to the Under Secretary of State for India.

I am directed by the Civil Service Commissioners to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th ult., relative to the certificate of age required to be produced by native candidates for the Indian Civil Service.

And, in reply, I am to acquaint you, for the information of the Secretary of State for India in Council, that the Commissioners think it very desirable that one set of rules and form of certificate of age applicable to all parts of India should be published by the Government of India, as proposed in the last paragraph of your letter, and that the rules published by the Bombay Government appear to the Commissioners to offer a model which might with advantage be adopted in the other Presidencies.

* "Paymasters are not to preside over Committees for the management of mess, band, or other regimental funds, nor should the moneys of such funds be placed in the custody of the Paymasters, as the duties of their office are sufficient to occupy their undivided attention. This does not apply to canteen funds referred to in para. 1,029."

Rules published by the Government of Bombay in the General Department, under date Dec. 22, 1870.

The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to publish the following Rules under which certificates of age will be issued to candidates for the Indian Civil Service from the Bombay Presidency :—

I.—Candidates for admission to compete in England for the Indian Civil Service are required, before leaving India, to obtain a certificate of age signed by the Chief Secretary to Government.

II.—In order to obtain a certificate, candidates are required to prove the date of their birth before the magistrate of the district in which the candidate's family resides ; or, if the family residence is in Bombay, before the senior magistrate.

III.—Candidates will signify their desire to compete, not less than three months before the date on which they propose to go to England, to the Chief Secretary to Government, who will then forward each application for the purpose of inquiry to the magistrate to whose district it belongs.

IV. The magistrate will call upon the candidate to appear and give evidence of the date of his birth within one month. He will carefully examine into the value of the evidence given, and forward a summary of it, with certified copies of all documents tendered, and with his comments and opinion, to the Chief Secretary to Government.

V. The documentary evidence which the candidates may be expected to produce comprises—

(a.)—The horoscope.
(b.)—Family books.
(c.)—Tradesmen's account books showing entries relating to the birth.
(d.)—The record of admission in the registers of the school in which the candidate was educated, and the record of the candidate's age at various periodical school examinations.
(e.)—If the candidate is matriculated, a certified copy of his application to the registrar in Form A.
(f.)—Oral testimony of persons acquainted with the candidate's family and others will also be taken, and the candidate is required to comply, to the best of his power, with any requisition the magistrate may make in order to clear up any doubt as to the purport of the documentary proofs.

VI. If the Chief Secretary shall be satisfied by the papers submitted by the magistrate that the candidate has stated the date of his birth correctly, he will issue a certificate declaring that the candidate has submitted the proofs of his birth to the magistrate of the district, and has satisfied him that he was actually born on or about the date stated by him, viz., the day of 18 .

VII. If the Chief Secretary finds reason to doubt that the candidate was born on the day asserted by him, the certificate will be refused, and the candidate will be unable to obtain admission to the competitive examination for the Indian Civil Service.

VIII. Where the date of a birth has been formally registered in a register kept by any public officer, an extract from the register duly certified by the proper official shall be accepted as sufficient proof of the date of the birth.

IX. Any declaration of age made after the application of these rules on occasion of seeking admission to any university examination, educational institution, or Government office, or otherwise recorded in a formal or deliberate manner, will be taken as conclusive evidence in disproof of the subsequent assertion by the same person that he is of a different age to that so declared or recorded.

Duty.—Artillery.—Subaltern officers of royal artillery, who have the local rank of captain, are not to be brought on the roster for station and garrison duties, except when other subalterns of royal artillery are detailed under G.O. 240 of 1867. (Bombay G.O.C. 819 of 1867, Clause II.)

Leave Allowances.—The Governor-general in Council directs that the words "privilege or examination leave" be substituted for the words "leave other than furlough or special leave" in Rule 3 of Chapter XI. of the Covenanted Civil Service Leave Code, and that the following rule be added to the rules under Section XI. :—"If the appointment of an officer is changed during the furlough, or upon his reporting his return, he must join his new appointment within the period of subsidiary leave allowed by this section. Nothing in excess of the allowances, admissible under this section, can be passed to him until he joins his new office."

Staff.—Pay and Allowances.—The following letter from the officiating secretary to the Govt. of India in the military department to the secretary to the Govt., Fort St. George, No. 268, dated June 9, is published for information :—"I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 817, dated March 7, inquiring what practice obtains in the Bengal presidency as regards the grant of horse allowance to an officer of cavalry when appointed a station staff officer. 2. In reply, I am to state, for the information of the Madras Government, that the Right Hon. the Gov. gen. in Council has decided that a cavalry officer holding such an appointment need not forfeit his regimental horse allowance while so employed."

Medical Officers' Pay.—H.E. the Gov. gen. in Council is pleased to notify that a medical officer transferred from one regiment to another on public grounds, but not otherwise, is entitled, while in transit, if he joins without delay, to a continuance of his consolidated charge pay, which will be passed to him on a certificate that the transfer was made solely in the interests of the public service. 2. When a medical officer is so transferred on public grounds, the officer who succeeds him will be allowed the consolidated charge pay, or the additional charge allowance, as the case may be ; and the medical officer of the regiment to which the transferred officer is proceeding, will continue to draw the same allowance he was in receipt of at the date of the transfer until he is relieved.

Inspections.—British Regiments.—In continuation of G.O., No. 356 of 1870, H.E. the C. in C. directs that a report be made on Sept. 1 in each year, on all regiments and detachments of British cavalry and infantry, by the officer commanding the station in which they are quartered. This report will enter chiefly into the interior economy and state of discipline of each corps and detachment, and in it will be brought forward any points connected therewith, which may appear to require the notice of higher authority. When the officer commanding the regiment or detachment is also in command of the station, the general officer commanding the division or district will forward to head quarters the name of an officer whom he would recommend to make the inspection, or will make it himself. The reports from the different stations, which will be in the form of a letter, and in duplicate, will be sent to the officer commanding the division or district, who will transmit them with his own remarks to the adjutant general.

Allowances of Staff Officers.—Doubts having arisen on the point, it is notified, for general information, that the rule which regulates the allowances to be drawn by a staff officer ordered on any separate duty, whilst proceeding to and returning from such duty, as laid down in Articles 4 and 5, Section XXXII., of the Pay and Audit Regulations of the Bengal Presidency, is applicable to the case of an officer on staff employ who may be temporarily withdrawn from his appointment on field service—viz., that if the amount of staff salary which the officer will draw in virtue of the temporary appointment is not greater than the staff salary of his substantive appointment, he will be allowed, whilst proceeding to and returning from the temporary appointment, a moiety of his own staff salary with the pay of his rank, or pay and allowances, as the case may be ; but if the staff salary which he draws in the temporary appointment be greater than that of his substantive appointment, he will be restricted to the pay of his rank (or pay and allowances, as the case may be) whilst going and returning. The above ruling does not affect the provisions of G.G.O. No. 494 of 1863 in respect to the allowances to be drawn by the officer who may be appointed to act for one so detached. This order is applicable to the three Presidencies.

Civil Furloughs.—The undermentioned gentlemen have obtained (in June) leave of absence and furlough to Europe on medical certificate under the rules of 1868, unless otherwise specified :—J. B. Challon, supervisor, 2nd grade, attached to the Poonee division, availed himself of the leave granted to him on May 15. Mr. M. Low, commissioner Narbada division, reported his departure from Bombay on the 7th inst., per steamer Behar, on the two years' furlough to Europe, granted to him in Notification No. 111, dated March 14. Mr. G. Wiggins, inspector of schools, Northern Circle, availed himself of the subsidiary leave granted to him March 29, on June 1, making over charge of his office to Mr. Krishna Rao, head clerk and curator. Mr. G. Wiggins inspector of schools, Northern Circle, reported his departure from Bombay to Europe on six months' private affairs leave on June 6. Col. J. B. Dennys, deputy commissioner, Hoshungabad, privilege for one month, from June 20, or the subsequent date on which he may avail himself of it. Mr. W. Jacob, deputy conservator of forests, Northern Division, availed himself of the three months' privilege leave granted to him on June 9, on June 12, making over charge of his duties to Mr. R. B. Morrow, assistant conservator. Mr. A. Robertson, officiating judge, Small Cause Court, Amritsar, privilege leave for one month, with effect from Sept. 1

Annuities to Non-Commissioned Officers.—In supersession of all previous orders on the subject, the Governor general in Council is pleased to fix the following sums to be disbursed annually in the three Presidencies on account of annuities and gratuities to non-commissioned officers and soldiers, both of the late local service and of the British army on the unattached list, and who are performing duties equivalent to regimental duties, viz. :—Annuities : Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, £40 per 100 sergeants eligible in each Presidency. Gratuities : Bengal, £45 ; Madras, £50 ; Bombay, £12. These awards are to be distributed according to the existing good conduct regulations. The class of soldiers who will be eligible to share in them will include European non-commissioned officers of native regiments ; of garrisons and depots, and of the Viceroy's band ; provost-sergeants, Royal Engineer and other European non-commissioned officers serving with the sappers and miners ; non-commissioned officers and men of the European invalid battalion present with their corps, and drummers, fifers, and buglers of European parentage serving with native regiments ; but barrack sergeants, conservancy sergeants, embarkation or transport sergeants, library sergeants, and road sergeants, attached to garrisons and depots, will have no claim to such awards. If at any time the sums above fixed should prove inadequate to actual requirements it will be open to H.E. the C. in C. in India, and the Governments of Madras and Bombay, respectively to submit an application on well-ascertained data for an additional grant.

P. D. Broughton, Administrator-General, No. 4, Strand, Calcutta, May 16.

Court-Martial.—At a district court-martial, assembled at Hazareebaugh on May 15, Second Class Assistant Apothecary James Lovell, of the Subordinate Medical Department, and attached to the 63rd regiment, was arraigned on the following charge:—With conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Hazareebaugh, on April 6, been drunk, when on duty, for the week. The Court found the prisoner guilty of the charge, and sentenced him to be dismissed from the service. The sentence has been confirmed.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Meean Meer, on Friday, March 31, Apothecary E. Pearsall, subordinate medical department, attached to the Royal Artillery, Meean Meer, was arraigned on the following charge:—With conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Meean Meer, on March 13, been drunk. Finding—The Court find that the prisoner is guilty of the charge. Sentence—To be reduced to the bottom in the list of apothecaries of the 1st class.—(Signed) H. R. Courtenay, Colonel R.A., president.—Meean Meer, March 31.—Disapproved, the sentence being inadequate to the offence. The prisoner was convicted in October last of being drunk on duty, and was warned that, for a repetition of his offence of drunkenness, he would be recommended for dismissal from the service. His dismissal has accordingly been recommended. (Signed) Napier of Magdala, General, Commander-in-Chief in India. Headquarters, Simla, May 11. Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief:—The numerous cases of drunkenness in the Subordinate Medical Department have attracted the Commander-in-Chief's attention. During the past year there have been twenty-three trials by Court-martial for drunkenness in this department, of which twenty-one resulted in convictions. Considering the very serious consequences which might arise from medicines being compounded or administered by a medical subordinate in a state of intoxication, the Commander-in-Chief, with the sanction of the Government, warns the medical subordinates that any medical subordinate convicted by a Court-martial of being drunk will be dismissed from the service. The Inspector-general of Hospitals, her Majesty's British Troops, is requested to take such measures as may be necessary to ensure a better supervision and control of the junior medical subordinates than would appear to be now exercised. (Signed) Napier of Magdala, General, Commander-in-Chief in India. Headquarters, Simla, June 19, 1871.—At a general court martial, assembled at Roorkee, on Wednesday, May 10, No. 1,492, Private and lance corporal G. Barnard, 109th regt., was arraigned on the following charges:—1st. Having, at Roorkee, April 7, been drunk. 2nd. Insubordination, in having, at Roorkee, on April 7, on being ordered by Ens. T. R. M. Macpherson, of the 109th foot, to take a drunken soldier to the guard, and to go into arrest himself, used insubordinate language towards him, his superior officer, in substance and to the effect following, that is to say, "No, I won't; I know who you are, you are an ensign in the 109th regiment, and I'm damned if I will." 3rd. Insubordination, accompanied with personal violence, in having at Roorkee, on April 7, used violence against Ens. T. R. M. Macpherson, of the 109th foot, by striking him across the face with a stick, the said Ens. Macpherson being his superior officer, and being in the execution of his office. Finding.—The Court find that the prisoner is of the 1st charge—guilty; of the 2nd charge—guilty; Of the third charge guilty. Sentence—To suffer penal servitude for the term of fifteen (15) years.—(Signed) H. Francis, Lieut. col. R.A., and colonel, president. Roorkee, May 10. Approved and confirmed. The Court have performed their duty properly in awarding to Lance Corporal George Barnard a sentence of penal servitude suitable to the very heinous offence of which he was guilty. In consideration of the circumstance under which the crime was committed, the prisoner's previous good character and the contrition he has expressed, I commute the sentence to five years' penal servitude in India. The conduct of Ensign Macpherson was characterised by a want of judgment and an ignorance or disregard of the Queen's Regulations, which are inexcusable even in an officer of only two years' service, and deserve the severest animadversion. After the prisoner's first answer, Ensign Macpherson should have sent for an escort to take him into custody, instead of entering into an altercation with a drunken man, which led to a most serious military crime.—(Signed) Napier of Magdala, General, Commander-in-Chief in India, headquarters, Simla, June 3.

THE TEA-PLANTERS' MEMORIAL.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., C.S.I., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to R. B. Davidson, Esq., Cachar, dated Simla, May 30, 1871.

Sir,—In reply to the memorial of the tea-planters and the European residents of Cachar and Sylhet, forwarded with your letter of April 25, I am directed to forward for your information and that of the gentlemen whom you represent, a copy of Letter No. 429r, dated March 1, 1871, addressed to the Secretary to the Landholders' and Commercial Association of British India.

2. That letter contains a full exposition of the views and policy which, after mature consideration, H.E. the Viceroy and Governor general in Council has deemed it right to adopt in respect to the defence and protection of those districts.

3. H.E. in Council confidently hopes that the means which have already been taken, and the measures about to be adopted, will have the effect of creating in the frontier districts of Sylhet and Cachar an amount of security which has never yet existed, and will remove the apprehensions which have naturally been excited by the recent unhappy occurrences.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

C. U. Aitchison,

THE SUBORDINATE EXECUTIVE SERVICE.

The following, recorded by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, is published for general information:—

I quite agree in the opinions which I find at the commencement of a previous correspondence that it is not desirable to pay young uncovenanted officers £250 or £300 per annum for learning their duty by vivisection, and that it is an extraordinary anomaly that, while covenanted servants have passed many examinations before entering the service, uncovenanted servants should enter without any examination at all. As things stand in this country, I do not desire a competitive or comparative system, but I do desire to establish a positive system of examinations.

I would have it that any person who can give satisfactory proof of character, respectability, and general moral and physical fitness, should be admitted to examination; that passing examination should give no claim to appointment; but that no person should be appointed to a subordinate executive appointment who has not passed, except servants of Government who have proved their capacity by long service in other appointments. As respects these last also, some examinations on the special subjects required for their new duties would be necessary.

I should like to secure—1st. A good general education. 2nd. In the case of natives, a certain knowledge of English. 3rd. In the case of Europeans, a certain knowledge of the vernacular. 4th. A knowledge of the most important criminal and revenue laws. 5th. Some knowledge of surveying, and the simplest elements of engineering.

As regards natives, for the first and second qualifications the university entrance examination might be accepted as a minimum. That would probably not be too much to ask of the Behar candidates. Any higher degrees would be considered as pro tanto in their favour, especially qualifications in civil engineering. The latter would of course render unnecessary all further examination to test the fifth qualification.

All native candidates should be required to show that they can read and write in the vernacular with such facility as to make them good mohurrirs.

In the case of European candidates, we should test by examination that they possess a thorough knowledge of reading, writing, and arithmetic. They should be able to write well, quickly, and correctly from dictation, to compose a report, and to do all ordinary arithmetic correctly and quickly. This last should be particularly tested. They should be able to speak and understand the vernacular language, and to read it in print and translate it. Their knowledge of it should be sufficient to enable them to do business easily immediately on appointment.

As regards language, a candidate might choose either Bengalee or Hindoostanee; but if he passed in the latter he would not be eligible for appointment in a Bengal district, and would therefore, of course, have less chance of obtaining an appointment.

The examination in criminal and revenue law would be confined to the Penal and Criminal Procedure Codes and a few selected laws.

I attach much importance to a certain knowledge of surveying and to the elements of engineering knowledge, both as useful for many things, and as showing that we want more than mere office men.

On the whole subject, however, I may say that my inclination is against appointing young men to high offices in the first instance, and I would much prefer that we should make certain inferior clerkships and similar offices open to all who have passed the university entrance examination, and then encourage them to pass in the criminal codes and surveying. Those who have done well and passed in these branches might well look for promotion.

As the system of limited competition once tried has been for some time in abeyance, and the present proposal is in some respects different from previous plans, it will be necessary to draw out new examination rules. A small committee will be appointed to settle the details on the principles here laid down. Meantime this note may be published as an intimation to all candidates that they need not hope for appointments till they are prepared to comply with conditions of the character here stated, and to submit themselves to examination under rules which will shortly be promulgated.

RIVERS THOMPSON,
Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

POWERS OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, BENGAL.

June 23.—Under Section 5, Regulation III. of 1822, the Lieutenant-governor of Bengal, with the approval of the Government of India, is pleased, as a temporary measure, to authorise the several members of the Board of Revenue to exercise generally, throughout the territories subject to their control, all the duties, powers, and authority which are vested in the Board collectively in respect of the departments detailed below:—

Mr. V. H. Schalch, senior member, will exercise the aforesaid powers in the department of land revenue, including the various departments connected with the same, that is to say, the revenue survey; the regulation and mutation of proprietory rights; the partition of estates; the sale or lease of waste lands; the acquisition of land for public purposes; the management of wards and attached estates, and the collection of cesses imposed on the land, or on the landholders, for any special purpose.

Mr. A. Money, junior member, will exercise the aforesaid powers in the departments of excise, assessed taxes, salt, opium, customs, stamps and stationery, tolls and canals, and all other taxes, tolls, and cesses.

With reference to the latter part of Clause 1, Section 5, of the above mentioned regulation, the Lieutenant-Governor, under the sanction of the Government of India, also specially authorises the several members of the Board to reverse or alter, when necessary, the decisions or orders of the officers subordinate to them in the departments made over to each respectively, so far as respects all executive matters; but not in respect to any proper judicial proceeding in which an appeal as of right lies to the Board of Revenue under the law, independent of the authority of the Executive Government. In such cases, as at present, the concurrence of the other member will be for the present required.

This order, investing the several members of the board with the powers above described, is not absolutely to deprive the other member of the power which he now possesses; and either member may exercise his ordinary powers in the departments specially allotted to the other member in case of emergency, such as absence of the member entrusted with the department, or the like, but each member will be solely responsible for the conduct of his departments, and the other member will only act at his request and as matter of mutual convenience. The Lieut.-Governor has no doubt that each member will give the other member the benefit of his advice when desired.

Of the two secretaries to the board, one will be assigned to each member, and will remain secretary in the departments transferred to such member, without reference to his position as senior or junior secretary.

RIVERS THOMPSON,
Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.

The Report of Mr. Juland Danvers, the Government Director of Indian Railway Companies, has just been issued, and furnishes the following information relating to these undertakings during the past year:—

The extent of railway communication now open in India is 5,051 miles, of which 557 miles were completed last year, and 211 since the beginning of the present year. The three presidency towns and the capitals of the North-West Provinces and of the Punjab are now united, and the system of trunk lines laid out by Lord Dalhousie may be regarded as completed. This has been effected at a cost of about £70,000,000, and profits at the rate of about 3½ per cent. upon this sum were earned last year. A further sum of about £18,000,000 has been expended upon the other lines open for traffic, and upon those which are in progress, making a total outlay of £88,000,000 upon railways up to the 31st March last.

Materials to the value of more than £28,000,000 have been sent out from this country for the railways since their commencement; and 263,499 tons, purchased for £1,611,512, were despatched last year. There are now nine companies, representing 51,887 shareholders, 5,367 boud or debenture holders, and 1,392 holders of debenture stock. Of this number 51,519 are Europeans, and 368 natives of India.

It has not been a good year for traffic. The gross receipts were about £6,214,000, of which £1,924,000 was obtained from passengers, and £4,150,000 from the conveyance of goods, &c. The expenses amounted to about £3,368,000, leaving a net revenue of £2,846,000, showing an excess of £340,000 over last year; but the mileage open and the capital expenditure have increased in a greater ratio.

The amount paid by the Government for guaranteed interest last year was £4,212,577. The net receipts fall short of this, leaving a sum of about £1,366,000 to be borne by the revenues of the country. During the first half of the year the East Indian Railway Company earned surplus profits, and divided with the Government a sum of £130,094. 13s. 3d. therefrom.

While (Mr. Danvers remarks) much may be done towards the improvement of the revenue from railways by wise economy, prudent management, and an equitable adjustment of rates and fares, their prosperity must, in a great measure, depend upon the general advance in the trade and condition of the people of the country. When commerce is active, and labour is in demand, railways will thrive if they are properly managed. During the past year trade has been depressed, and railways have suffered. Much of the cotton which had been grown has not found its way to the coast, and in some places it has been stored or buried to wait for better times. At the same time, the high amount of working and maintenance expenses on certain lines seem to imply either an absence of strict economy or imperfect construction in the first instance, and to demand constant and earnest attention from the managers of the railways.

* * * * * *

While the expenditure of some was in the proportion of 42 per cent. of the gross receipts, that of others was as high as 79 per cent. The train mileage receipts varies from 10·55d. to 2·52d., and the expenses from 6·39d. to 2·84d.

Of the 18,224,859 passengers conveyed, 92·73 per cent. were of the lowest classes, 6·52 per cent. second class, and ·75 per cent. first class. Compared with last year there was an increase of 1,800,000 in the number of passengers. Goods to the amount of 3,435,269 tons and 425,057 head of live stock were carried, compared with 3,359,792 tons and 430,983 head of live stock carried in the previous year.

Accidents have not been so numerous as in previous years, but a very serious one occurred on the Madras line, by which eight lives were lost. A bridge over a river gave way, and a train was precipitated into the water. During the whole year thirteen passengers lost their lives, and of these nine through causes within their control.

A conference of Government and railway officers was held during the year, and several minor questions connected with the working of the lines and the character of the rolling stock were discussed and settled. This will probably be the first of a series of such meetings, and much advantage may be expected from them.

The new guage for certain future undertakings has been fixed at 3 feet 3⅜ inches—that is, the French metre. Most of the State lines will be constructed on this scale. While the question of guage was under consideration, operations in connection with the Government works were, with one or two small exceptions, kept in abeyance. Surveys have, however, been made of certain lines, for which estimates and designs are being prepared, and the promise of considerable progress during the next two or three years has been given.

THE FAMINE IN PERSIA.—A letter received in Bombay by the last mail from the Gulf gives a history of the famine and distress in Persia. For five years, according to this writer, matters have been growing worse, the climate becoming yearly drier, crops more scanty, and the Government more exacting. From Phars, lately the granary of Persia, the population, after in many cases selling their children have fled to distant cities; in Kerman, where not long ago wheat was sold in the bazaars at two annas per maund, the clamour of the famishing population has compelled the authorities to search for and confiscate the food stored away in private cellars and warehouses. In Yezd, which was never to any great extent grain-producing, but depended almost entirely upon Kerman, itself now famine-stricken, the condition of affairs can be hardly imagined. When grain first disappeared, camels', asses', horses', dogs', and cats' flesh was eagerly eaten, and when these failed the lower classes kidnapped and devoured children. Even dead bodies were eaten by the hunger-maddened populace.—Pioneer.

Home.

THE INDIAN CIVIL ENGINEERING COLLEGE.

On Saturday the Indian Civil Engineering College, about which more than one discussion has taken place in the House of Commons this session, was opened in the presence of the Duke of Argyll, Secretary of State for India, Sir S. Northcote, M.P., Colonel Chesney (President of the College), Mr. H. Merivale (Under Secretary for India), Major-General Baker, Mr. R. D. Mangles, Sir H. Montgomery, Lieutenant-General Sir R. Vivian, Mr. W. U. Arbuthnot, Sir R. Montgomery, Major-General Sir R. Rawlinson, Sir E. Ryan, Major-General Napier, Lieutenant-General Sir Duncan Cameron, &c., the Professors of the College, and several ladies. Cooper's-hill, on which the College is built, is splendidly situated, commanding most extensive views of Windsor Castle and the valley of the Thames. It is better known, perhaps, as the subject of Sir John Denham's poem, which is entitled "Cooper's Hill." It was recently purchased and converted, under the direction of Sir Digby Wyatt, into a College for the education of civil engineers for the service of the Public Works Department in India. It is intended to accommodate 150 students ultimately, but at present only fifty have actually taken possession of their places. The College course will ordinarily extend over three years, and all the students who pass through it successfully will be appointed to the Indian Public Works Department as assistant-engineers, second grade—the salary of which grade is Rs. 4,200 (about £420) per annum—and will be provided with a free passage to India.

The guests, having been shown over the College, assembled in the College-hall, where they were addressed by the Duke of Argyll. After stating the object for which they had assembled, he said it had been remarked many years ago that were the English, through any mishap, extirpated from India, they would not leave behind them in the country any marks of their occupation. That was, however, before the establishment of railways in India. The present railway system of India, which was begun and devised by the Marquis of Dalhousie, was one of which no country need be ashamed. It was no small boast to be able to say that, during a comparatively short portion of the English occupation of India, railways had been laid down along the valley of the Ganges from Calcutta to Lahore. (Hear, hear.) This was not properly the result of private enterprise, for there was a Government guarantee. Much progress had certainly of late years been made with the public works of India; but a vast amount of still further progress remained to be accomplished. The Government, in dealing with this important matter, had been placed in rather a peculiar position. In England there was never any lack of efficient engineers. They were, he supposed, developed by means of the competition which existed in this country. The result was that in England we were never in want of distinguished men to undertake our public works. The fact of being able to find educated engineers in England was no proof, however, that there existed in England proper means of scientific education. In India the case was quite different. There was a great want in India of properly-educated engineers. Hitherto there had been no means to supply the need of India in this respect. When the present Earl of Derby was the Minister for India, a special college for the education of engineers to serve in India was mooted. Every year since then it became more and more evident that some such special college should be established. The College had, in fact, become an indispensable thing. Its establishment had, indeed, been forced upon the Government. The noble duke quoted the authorities of Mr. Conybeare, Professor Jenkyn, of Edinburgh, and others, to show that there was no adequate provision for the education of civil engineers in the country, and said that India suffered greatly for the want of persons having special knowledge. The civil engineering profession was one of the noblest of all professions. Lord Macaulay once said, in a discussion, that the work of civilisation was nothing else than exercising a command over the resources of nature. That was a good summary of what the profession of civil engineering really was. The triumphs of engineering were always serviceable to the world. They were valuable additions to the permanent stock of the resources of mankind. He felt bound to explain that admission to this College was obtained by open competition. It was desired that the young who entered that College should obtain, not only the knowledge which would be most useful to them in the professional career which would be opened up to them, but that they should also receive the general training necessary to make them English gentlemen. (Hear, hear.) He wished it to be clearly understood that there was to be in this college nothing in the shape of monopoly. It was open to all. (Applause.) The noble duke concluded with an earnest appeal to the students present to take the fullest possible advantage of the education which the College afforded, and dwelt particularly on the importance of cultivating the good opinion of the people of India when they came to mix among them. (Hear, hear.) Colonel Chesney then made some observations on the objects and functions of the College, sang the praises of culture in which he held that Indian officials were lacking, and said the objects of the managers would be, not to make the students mere book-worms, but to give them a practical knowledge of those subjects which would be most beneficial and useful to them through life. (Hear, hear.) The visitors then proceeded to the dining hall, where a déjeuner was served, after which they returned to town.

Miscellaneous.

Bills on India.—Tenders for £400,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 2nd inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £340,000, and to Bombay, £60,000. The minimum price was fixed, as before, at 1s. 10⅛d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10⅜d. will receive about 26 per cent. Those above in full. Tenders on Bombay at 1s. 10⅜d. will receive in full.

Recruits for India.—An India Office return shows that from the year 1850 to 1858, both years inclusive, 20,134 recruits were sent by the East India Company to India from their depot at Warley, of whom 11,192 were over 20 years of age, 8,938 from 18 to 20 years of age, and only four, who were specially enlisted, under 18 years of age. Men usually embarked for India within six months of their enlistment.

Albert Reconstruction Scheme.—A report has been issued by the Albert Reconstruction Committee to the policy-holders consequent upon the decision of Lord Cairns to proceed with the winding-up of the estate. In this they shortly explain the basis of their plan and the benefits which it would have conferred upon the assured. They point out that great advantage will result from the appointment of Lord Cairns as arbitrator, by which, though he has not seen his way to reconstruction, the winding-up will be completed in much less time, and with much greater economy, than would have been the case in Chancery.

Bills of Lading.—A meeting of steamship owners interested in the India and China trades, via the Suez Canal, was held on Friday, at the offices of the General Shipowners' Society, Cornhill, on the subject of the forms of bills of lading. There were present—Mr. Norwood, M.P., Mr. Gellatly, Mr. Tindall, Mr. Maxton, Mr. Howden, Mr. Bott, Mr. Sothern, Mr. Monck, Mr. Montgomerie, Mr. Andrew Duncan, Mr. M. Wills, Mr. A. G. Robinson, Mr. D. Currie, and Mr. J. Glover. A committee, with power to add to their number, was appointed to meet the merchants. A meeting of sailing shipowners will be held on Tuesday (this day).

An Unlikely Rumour.—It would seem that the press of India is, no less than that at home, afflicted occasionally with the vacuity arising from want of news wherewith to fill their parched-up pages. The present "silly season" of the Indian Presidencies has set in with one of the silliest of announcements, viz., that Lord Mayo's successor as Governor-General has already been mentioned by "those who ought to know!" &c., &c., and Lord Sandhurst is lighted upon as the coming Viceroy. Why not Lord Strathnairn, if mere guessing is the foundation for the report? The on dit need hardly require repetition in this country, only that it has gained such unnecessary currency in India.—Broad Arrow.

Death of Captain H. Girardot, R.H.A.—We regret to announce the death, which occurred after a short illness at Rathmines on the 28th July, of Second Captain H. Girardot, C Brigade, R.H.A. (late Bengal). Captain Girardot obtained his commission December 12, 1856; became first lieutenant April 27, 1858; and second captain March 24, 1865. He served in the Indian Mutiny campaign, and was present at the actions of Bareilly, Shahjehanpore, and Bunkagoan (medal). The remains of the deceased officer were escorted on Monday last, with military honours, from his residence in Rathmines to the North Wall, for transmission to England. The procession was formed at 11.30 A.M., and was preceded by the band of the 8th Hussars, playing the Dead March in Saul. The firing party and guard of honour were under the command of Captain Shakerley. The body was carried on a gun-carriage of H Battery C. Brigade R.H.A., drawn by six black horses.—Army and Navy Gazette.

Army of India.—The annual statement of the progress of India shows that during the financial year 1869-70, for a net expenditure in India and England of £15,247,000, a military force of 190,662 officers, non-commissioned officers, and men was maintained in India—6,545 British officers, 60,425 British non-commissioned officers and men, and 122,122 native soldiers. The British cavalry and infantry, after certain reductions since carried out, now comprise respectively nine regiments of 455 men and 50 regiments of 885 men, officers being excluded in both cases. General Norman is of opinion that these British forces can bear no further reduction, but hopes that some economy may be effected in departments, and especially in the overland transport service. The health of the troops generally in 1869-70 was good, the death rate throughout Bengal amounting only to an average of 21¼ per thousand. The Government is fully sensible of the advantage of having troops in the hills, and several stations are in course of formation on the lower range of the Himalayas, at Puchmurree, in Central India, and elsewhere.

Mercantile Failure.—The Glasgow Herald announces the suspension at New York of Messrs. W. B. Cooper, jun., and Co., East India traders.

Northern Assam Tea Company.—It is announced by Mr. Barrow, the official liquidator of the Northern Assam Tea Company, that a dividend of 2s. 6d. in the pound is payable to the creditors on and after the 9th inst.

Postal Notices.—According to information received by telegraph from Hong Kong, the steam vessel which has hitherto carried mails between that place and Manila has been withdrawn, and, in lieu of it, a service has been established between Singapore and Manila. Consequently all correspondence for the Philippine Islands will, in future, be forwarded to Singapore instead of to Hong Kong. Notice is also given that mails for Malta, intended for conveyance via Marseilles, will hereafter be made up on the mornings of the 5th, 15th, and 25th of each month, with supplementary mails on the evenings of those dates, except when either of them falls on a Sunday, on which occasions the mails will be made up on the previous evening. Mails for Malta will also continue to be made up every Monday and Friday evening, for conveyance via Italy.

Dr. Beke.—It affords us much pleasure to be able to announce that Mr. Gladstone has placed the name of Dr. Beke on the Civil List for a pension of £100 a-year. Our readers will recollect that some months ago we urged Dr. Beke's claims on the notice of the Prime Minister, and expressed the opinion that few men to whom this recognition on the part of the Crown has been accorded ever deserved it better than the distinguished traveller and scholar to whom we refer. His travels in, and writings about, Abyssinia occupied many of the best years of his life, and for much of the knowledge we possess of that part of Africa we are indebted to Dr. Beke. He is probably the greatest Amharic scholar of his time, and his claims to the part of interpreter to the Abyssinian expedition were greater than those of any other man, although, as frequently occurs, these claims were not admitted. Mr. Gladstone has, however, now done something by way of compensation for the slights and injuries which Dr. Beke has had to endure, and we congratulate him on his graceful concession to merit, which is as creditable to him as it is welcome to its distinguished recipient.—Civil Service Gazette.

Indian Architecture.—Last year there appeared at Bombay two large folio albums illustrative of ancient Indian architecture, consisting of very beautiful photographs by Mr. Sykes, accompanied with descriptive and historical introductions by Mr. J. Burgess, Fellow of the University, and Acting Hon. Sec. to the Asiatic and Geographical Societies of Bombay. The first album was entitled "The Temples of Satrunjaya, the celebrated Jaina Place of Pilgrimage near Palitana in Kathiawad," and consisted of forty-five exquisite photographs, measuring twelve by fourteen inches, with an introduction. The second consisted of photographs from Somanath Girnar and Junagadh in Kathiawad, forty-five in number—of a like size, and similarly described. Copies of these superb works were presented to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, on his visit to Bombay by his Highness the Rajah of Junagadh. We now learn that Mr. Burgess is about to publish a full description of the Brahmanical Caves of Elephanta, illustrated with drawings and photographs, both of the famous Rock Cut Temples and of the minor excavations, some of which have scarcely ever been alluded to by previous writers; and that conjointly with Mr. Fergusson, D.C.L., F.R.S., he is engaged upon a new illustrative work on the Temples of Ellora and Nassick.—Mechanics' Magazine.

The Suez Canal.—The following letter from Sir Daniel A. Lange is taken from the Pall Mall Gazette:—Sir,—My attention has been directed to a paragraph in your issue of the 1st inst., alleging that "one steamer had touched sixty times on her passage through the Suez Canal." I have made inquiries into the matter, and am now informed by the President of the Suez Canal Company that the statement is devoid of truth. May I take this opportunity to observe that Article 3 in the printed regulations furnished to captains expressly mentions that the captain is responsible for the conduct and management of his vessel in passing through the canal, and had the exceptional incident, to which your Suez correspondent alludes, really occurred, it would cast great discredit upon the captain's management, seeing that the largest-sized ships pass through daily without difficulty or delay. Not long since a similar rumour was spread abroad that a ship had grounded thirty-one times, and this also proved on inquiry to be a pure invention. It would be highly desirable in future to append the names of the ship and captain to any reports of this sort, which are not only manifestly unjust, but calculated to mislead shippers, whose interests in the truth of these matters are identical with those of the Suez Canal Company.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your very obedient servant, Daniel A. Lange, English Director of the Suez Canal Company, 21, Regent-street, London, August 5, 1871.

The Port of Souda.—A correspondent writes to a contemporary as follows:—As the trade between Great Britain and India, via the Suez Canal, has continued to increase, the necessity of a convenient port of call in the Mediterranean has been much felt. Considerable attention is, in consequence, now directed to the port of Souda, in the island of Crete, which is in every way adapted to the purpose. The port of Souda is secure in all weathers, and, by its geographical position, is naturally designed, not only as the port of transit, but also as the entrepot for the commerce which is daily increasing, via the Suez Canal, between Europe and India. The Turkish Government has determined upon making the Bay of Souda a naval station for the Mediterranean fleet; and, in view of the probable future of the port, has executed a number of very important works, while others are in course of construction. Amongst these are a dock, an arsenal, a foundry with workshops attached, a steam saw-mill, yards for boat-building and the making of ships' gear, masts, &c. Buildings have also been erected containing offices for the various departments and lodgings for the clerks and workmen, together with warehouses for storing timber and depots suitable for a coaling station. A fine barrack capable of accommodating 500 soldiers, with sufficient space for military exercises, is likewise being built. At Souda the old salt-pits on the shore have been filled up, the surrounding land drained, and, on the 25th of last June the inauguration of a new town, called Azizirgé, took place on the spot. The foundations of this new town have been marked out, the plans prepared, and the buildings commenced. An hotel and restaurant will shortly be completed. The inhabitants of the islet of Souda, near the entrance to the port, will remove to the town of Azizirgé, and strong fortifications will be erected on the ground vacated. Two other forts will be constructed at either side of the port. The road between Canea and Souda is nearly finished, and a road-steamer, ordered from England, will run upon it, carrying passengers and produce to the latter port. The advantages to steamers visiting those waters of the port of Souda over that of Syra, as a port of call, will be considerable, not the least being the shortening of the voyage by several leagues. There is every probability, therefore, that the port of Souda will become one of the most important in the Eastern Mediterranean.

Imperial Parliament.

House of Lords, Monday, July 31.—Army Regulation Bill.—Lord Granville having proposed to postpone the second reading of the Army Regulation Bill until after the vote of censure had been disposed of, the Duke of Richmond expressed his concurrence in the arrangement, and rose to propose as a substantive resolution that which he had originally proposed as a "rider" to the second reading. Declining altogether to enter upon the merits of the Army Bill, he recapitulated the Parliamentary proceedings in regard to that measure, and briefly sketched the joint action of the Executive and the Legislature in regard to army purchase from its commencement. Under such circumstances the Crown ought not to have been advised to exercise the Royal prerogative without reference to any Act of Parliament. If the Crown were advised that it was acting under statute, as had been asserted by Lord Granville on the evening the warrant was signed, it had been improperly advised, and Her Majesty's signature had been improperly obtained. Although it was in the power of the Crown to set up the network of vested interests created by army purchase, he maintained that the Crown could not alone, ex mero motu, get rid of them, and that it was a distinct interference with the legislative functions of their Lordships to take the matter out of their hands, while the Bill was still before them. Was that House a deliberate Assembly or not? or was its opinion only to be taken when it coincided with that of the Government? He asked their Lordships to enter a protest as strong and as decorous as Parliamentary usage allowed against a course which threatened to render all discussion liable to be arrested by the "Sic volo, sic jubeo," of an imperious Minister.—Lord Granville, after a pleasant reference to the brightest gems of the Duke's speech—which he declared to be his quotations from three of the speeches of his colleagues at the Mansion House—examined the alternatives before the Government, and declared that the only course open to them was to deal with Army purchase by the Royal Prerogative. The Government were asked why, if they had this power, they did not exercise it six months ago; but would it have been wise to abolish purchase before obtaining the assent of the House of Commons? After criticising the changes made in the form and substance of the resolution now before the House, he adduced various precedents to show that purchase had been regulated and abolished by the authority of the Crown. Reminding their Lordships of the course taken by the late Duke of Wellington in abstaining from bringing the differences between the two Houses into prominence, but speaking against all hope that similar wisdom would be shown that night, he impressively pointed out the consequences of the resolution, and its effect upon the public out of doors.—Lord Salisbury accused the Government of having committed a grave breach of constitutional usage in having brought Army purchase within Parliamentary jurisdiction, and in having afterwards snapped their fingers in their lordships' faces when they were outvoted. Examining and declaring to be insufficient the pretexts by which the conduct of the Government had been justified in calling up a dormant Royal Prerogative, he expressed a belief that up to the rejection of the Army Bill the Government had not determined to issue the Royal Warrant, but that in so doing they were actuated by passion and resentment. After a scathing analysis of the majority of the Government in the Lower House, which he asserted was led by its extreme section, he argued that under such circumstances the functions of their lordships rose into peculiar prominence, and that it was their duty to remit to the decision of the constituencies measures passed under pressure of this kind. When their lordships were told that it was their duty always to agree with the other House, he asked whether it was worth while to retain their power by uniformly acting against their convictions. They complained of a great constitutional wrong and a misuse by an imperious Ministry of the prerogative of the Crown.—The Duke of ARGYLL defended the conduct of the Government against the unconstitutional and unreasonable vote to which that House came on the Army Bill.—Lord CARNARVON claimed for the majority of their lordships great moderation in having averted many painful collisions with the other House. The Radical section of the other House clamoured for the suppression of that House whenever their lordships differed from them, but their lordships' House always had been free, and when it ceased to be so it ought no longer to exist. —Lord ROMILLY expressed considerable doubts as to the legality of the Royal Warrant, and inquired whether the opinion of the law officers of the Crown had been taken before it was issued.—Lord PENZANCE replied in the affirmative.—Lord DERBY, as his speech on the Army Bill had been quoted in justification of the abolition of purchase by the Royal Warrant, said there was a wide difference between pointing out that a certain course was possible and recommending that it should be taken. After criticising unfavourably the course taken by the Government, he finally condemned it as bad in a constitutional point of view, and worse as a precedent; and, regretting that the Government, by adopting it, had injured a good cause, he heartily joined in the vote of censure. The resolution might not produce a political change, but it would place on record their opinion that astuteness was not statesmanship, and that smart practice did not pay in the long run.—The Duke of SOMERSET thought it might have been better if a little more time had been taken in issuing the warrant, but purchase must go, and no other course than that which they adopted was really open to the Government.—Lord RUSSELL, after an historic retrospect of the Acts regulating purchase, reaffirmed his opinion on the expediency of abolishing purchase, but justified his vote on the Army Bill in the absence of any plan of Army reorganisation. Their lordships would also be perfectly justified in visiting with their condemnation the undue interposition of Royal prerogative as a course of proceeding which tended to the gravest and most mischievous consequences.—Lord NORTHBROOK replied to various points raised by Lord Russell and other speakers.—Lord CAIRNS insisted on the unprecedented nature of the course taken by the Government, and entered upon a legal argument to show that the Royal Warrant was not issued in the exercise of a statutory right. Describing prerogative as a power not conferred by statute, he reminded their lordships that both the Premier and Lord Granville assured Parliament that the warrant was not an act of the prerogative, but a statutory right, and it was clear that the advice given to the Sovereign was that she was not making use of her prerogative in issuing the warrant. The Government, therefore, stood convicted on their own confession of having through ignorance misrepresented to the Sovereign the character of the act she was performing, which, instead of being a statutory act, was, in fact, an act of the highest and most stringent prerogative. The time was past for prerogative, as such, to overthrow the net of vested interests sanctioned by statute. If the abolition of purchase had been referred beforehand to the Liberal party in the House of Commons they would not have consented to see it accomplished by an act of the prerogative, but would have preferred that it should be decided by our Parliamentary system. He concluded a powerful peroration by saying that the Government would get their Bill, but would take with it the censure and condemnation of the House, deliberately approved by the country, for having, at a crisis that demanded the wisdom and forbearance of statesmen, acted with the petulance and recklessness of children. They had obtained an unreal triumph, but they had strained and discredited the constitution of the country.—The LORD CHANCELLOR denied that the Government had been convicted, either on their own confession or otherwise, of having given advice to the Sovereign which had been unwarranted by the facts. He explained that which was really conveyed to the Royal ear, and, replying in some detail to the legal arguments urged by Lord Cairns, came to the vote of censure, which, he said, was as little justified as any vote to be found in their journals. Quoting words used by the Duke of Richmond in a different sense, he said that defeat was more glorious to the vanquished in such a cause, than triumph to the victors could possibly be. Their Lordships divided, when there appeared—Contents, 162; and Non-contents, 82. The vote of censure was therefore carried by a majority of 80.—The Army Regulation Bill was then read a second time, and the Committee was fixed for Tuesday.

HOUSE OF LORDS, TUESDAY, Aug. 1.—THE ARMY BILL IN COMMITTEE.—The Duke of RICHMOND moved an addition to the preamble, setting forth that by Royal Warrant all purchase regulations had been cancelled and determined. The motion was agreed to, together with certain amendments in the clauses rendered necessary by the ecital of the Royal Warrant.—The Earl of KELLIE expressed a hope r that the Secretary for India and the Secretary for War would put a liberal construction on the clause, and would grant compensation not only to Indian officers now in the service, but to those who retired in 1861.—The Duke of ARGYLL explained that with regard to the Indian bonus he had simply adhered to the arrangement made by his predecessor (the Marquis of Salisbury). Their lordships were probably aware that in India a system somewhat similar to purchase at one time existed. A man could not, indeed, purchase over a colleague's head, but it was customary for the officers to make up a purse, in order to push each other, and the noble marquis's despatch settled the question how far they should be compensated for money so expended. He had sent out instructions that the arrangement should be carried out in as liberal a spirit as possible towards the officers.—The Marquis of SALISBURY would recommend the noble duke to bear in mind that the very liberal terms insured to English officers by the Bill, though not conferring any new rights on Indian officers, would give them an impression that their treatment would be equally liberal. While, therefore, pursuing the policy pursued by successive Secretaries of State, the noble duke should consider whether it was possible to extend to old Indian officers the liberality now shown by Parliament to British officers.—Lord VIVIAN, without objecting to the clause re-vesting in Her Majesty the jurisdiction in respect of the Auxiliary Forces now exercised by Lords-Lieutenant, moved an amendment to prevent its exercise by the Secretary of State.—A brief discussion followed, which was terminated by the Duke of RICHMOND, who thought the militia and volunteer officers had no cause of complaint when they were placed on an equal footing with officers of the army, and expressed himself satisfied with the assurance given by the Government that the appointments to the auxiliary forces would be made by the Commander-in-Chief, subject to the responsibility of the Secretary of State.—Lord VIVIAN thereupon withdrew his amendment.—Upon an amendment moved by Lord MELVILLE, the Duke of RICHMOND suggested that recommendations for first commissions in the auxiliary forces should be made by Lords-Lieutenant; and Lord NORTHBROOK stated that it was the intention of the Government to consult those functionaries upon all first commissions. The Bill as amended then went through committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, Aug. 3.—THE ABOLITION OF PURCHASE.—Colonel C. LINDSAY asked the Secretary of State for War whether, on the abolition of purchase, the limit of the period of command of a battalion would be retrospective; whether officers displaced would at once receive any portion of the over-regulation money they had paid; and whether officers who went on half-pay after twenty-five years' service would receive it.—Mr. CARDWELL said the limit would not be retrospective, and that the other questions were all questions of the construction of the Act, the terms of which were so fully considered by this House, and whose authoritative interpretation will rest with the Commissioners. The intention of the Bill was to put all the officers affected by it in as good a pecuniary position as they would have been in if the Act had not passed.

HOUSE OF LORDS, FRIDAY, Aug. 4.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—On the motion for the third reading, a few last words of protest fell from Viscount MELVILLE, the Marquis of EXETER, Lord ROMILLY, the Marquis of CLANRICARDE, and the Marquis of SALISBURY, who, however, explained that the Bill was not now one for the abolition of purchase, but was merely one for compensation to officers.—Earl GRANVILLE said that the view of the noble marquis was exactly that entertained by her Majesty's Government.—The Bill was then read a third time. On the motion that it do pass, Lord STRATHNAIRN proposed to amend the sixth clause by transferring the appointment of militia officers from the lords-lieutenant of counties to the Commander-in Chief; but after some conversation the noble and gallant lord withdrew his proposal, and the Bill was passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, SATURDAY, Aug. 5.—JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL BILL.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL moved the second reading of this Bill, the object of which is to add four paid judges to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. He said that there were 350 cases still before the Committee, although a large number had been disposed of during the present session. It was proposed by the Bill to appoint two judges of the Superior Courts at their present salaries of £5,000 a year, and to add two judges of the Court of Bengal, who should receive an addition of £1,500 a year to their present salaries.—Mr. T. COLLINS moved the rejection of the Bill, on the ground that it was impossible to deal with the Bill at this period of the session.—Mr. V. HARCOURT thought it was a very little Bill on a very large and important subject. He condemned the existing constitution of the Judicial Committee, and contended that the proper course to adopt was to establish a supreme court.—Mr. WEST supported the Bill, whilst Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY and Mr. Serjeant SIMON expressed a hope that it would only be a temporary measure.—After some further discussion the Bill was read a second time.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY, Aug. 7.—INDIAN PRIZE MONEY.—The Earl of HARROWBY moved that an address should be presented to her Majesty for a copy of any communication in May last from the Secretary of State for India to the Government of India relative to a claim for arrears of interest on prize property lodged in 1858 by General Whitelock's prize agents in the State Treasury at Allahabad.—The Duke of ARGYLL intimated that it would be irregular to produce a despatch of this kind until the answer of the Indian Government has been received.—After a few words from the Earl of LONGFORD, the motion was withdrawn.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, Aug. 7.—THE BONUS SYSTEM IN THE INDIAN ARMY.—In reply to Colonel JERVIS, Mr. GRANT DUFF said that, in the event of the Army Regulation Bill becoming law, the Secretary of State for India in Council would most carefully consider whether its provisions affected, and if so how, the decisions which had been given by his predecessors with reference to the compensation of the officers of the late Indian Army for the abolition of the bonus system.

NAUTICAL INCIDENTS.

The Mirzapore, Bailloux, from Maulmain to Falmouth, which put into Mauritius on May 30, came in to repair a leak. After a survey had been held, it was found necessary to discharge and dock the vessel, and she is now on the slip being repaired and re-metalled.

The Latona, Hunt, from Bimlipatam to London with rice, put into Mauritius on June 5 to stop a leak, having experienced heavy weather; she began to make a considerable quantity of water on May 10 in lat. 7 N., lon. 60 E., and continued to make eight inches of water per hour in moderate weather. She has discharged the greater part of her cargo, and is being caulked and repaired in her upperworks afloat.

The Hotspur, Porteus, from Madras to London, with a general cargo, which put into Mauritius on June 9, leaky in topsides, had the pumps choked, and the lower part of her cargo (coffee) damaged; this is being landed from the outer anchorage, and the pumps are being put in order. It is expected that from 400 to 500 bags will have to be sold.

The Challenge, Craigie, from Bombay to Liverpool, with cotton, previously reported as having put into Mauritius on June 10 leaky in topsides, had a strong list to starboard. The master reports that on June 3, in lat. 14 S., lon. 74 E., after having experienced strong trade winds and heavy cross seas from the S.W., the vessel began to make water, which increased rapidly, so that the pumps had to be kept going night and day in order to free the vessel; she has discharged the greater part of her cargo and repaired her upper works afloat. About 350 bales of cotton and jute will have to be sold, being badly damaged.

AFGHAN POLITICS.

The Broad Arrow questions how far the peace patched up between father and son may be of a lasting character. On this point it is the more doubtful, as the conditions of peace do not appear altogether to remove the original ground of complaint; and the telegraph, on news derived from which it is proverbially difficult to speculate, gives but uncertain indications on this head. This much, however, is reasonably certain. Yakoob Khan is, since the death of the Ameer's favourite son and destined successor, at the battle of Kujhbaz, in 1805, the heir apparent to the Ameership. The Ameer, however, influenced by his youngest wife (a daughter of Aslum Khan, the murderer of Feramoorz), to whom he is extremely partial, passed over both Yakoob and his younger brother, in favour of her child, a lad of some fourteen years of age, Abd'ulla Jan, a boy not yet in his teens, whom he latterly designated as his successor, and who, it may be remembered, of all his family accompanied him to the Durbar at Umballa in the spring of 1869. Yakoob, who had displayed conspicuous ability in his Governorship of Herat, when he held it on his father's behalf, not unnaturally resented this; and, throwing himself, as we have already seen, into the arms of Persia, commenced the rebellion which has for the present terminated. There can be little doubt that Shere Ali must have conceded the question of the succession, or Yakoob, in the flush of victory, would not have come to terms. But the Governorship of Herat, on which post Yakoob was understood to have set his heart, has been conferred, seemingly as one of the conditions, not on him, but on his (own) brother, Sirdar Mahomed Ayoob Khan. Such are the complications of Afghan politics that it is difficult, as yet, more closely to arrive at conclusions as to the facts of the past, or to forecast the probabilities of the future. But it is not too soon to acknowledge the eminent service rendered by Lord Mayo in quenching a flame which might have spread throughout a large part of Central Asia, and have caused us much loss both of material and moral power. In accomplishing this task under circumstances of great difficulty, and under the necessary disadvantage of possessing tardy if not imperfect information, Lord Mayo has shown himself fully equal to the high position he holds; and has evinced qualities, the possession of which his political opponents were, at a period of his appointment to it, too ready to deny to him. We hope this may be generally recognised.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

ORIGINALLY PREPARED UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF

AND REPRODUCED AT THE INDIA MUSEUM

BY ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

EDITED BY

J. FORBES WATSON AND JOHN WILLIAM KAYE.

MEMORANDUM.

In addition to the copies of this work prepared for the use of the Government, the Secretary of State for India in Council has authorised the publication of an edition for sale.

The work will contain about 450 Photographs on mounts, in eight volumes, super-royal 4to., and it will be issued at £2. 5s. per volume.

The First and Second Volumes are still on hand.

From the Times.

"We gather from the Preface that this work grew to its present handsome dimensions from a very modest commencement. It originated in the wish of Lord and Lady Canning to take home a private collection of photographs which might serve to recall the scenes and incidents of their Indian life, but as it advanced its importance began to be perceived, and Government, with a most judicious expenditure of public money, took it in hand. Very few of the photographs are unaccompanied by descriptions, often copious and graphic, of the subjects they illustrate, and the result is a singularly varied panorama of human life and character exhibited under almost every conceivable aspect. Although these four volumes deal with only a portion of the empire, there is scarcely a type of character, from the loftiest to the most debased, that is not to be found in them, and nowhere else, perhaps, in the world are peculiarities of character so strongly marked and sharply defined as in India. We might exhaust far more space than we can afford without giving the reader at all an adequate idea of the strange varieties of character to which these volumes introduce him."

Second Edition, with Additions.

To be had of all Booksellers.

PROFESSIONAL OPINIONS

Supporting and Recommending this System.

March, 1871.

I have much pleasure in bearing my unqualified testimony to the admirable system of military exercises as given in Sergeant-major B. Browne's book. I can speak confidently of it, having had personal experience of its value. I am in the habit of recommending it to all those under my care, who require this additional mode of treatment for developing their frame.

C. M. Miller, M.D.,
Assistant-surgeon, London Rifle Brigade.

Mr. Browne,—Nothing can be more true, in my opinion, than all you say in favour of training all our boys to military exercises. Its usefulness cannot be overrated, either to the boys themselves or to the nation, which would thus find, in a short time, and without any inconvenience or effort, the best part of its educated population prepared to take part in the defence of the country, almost without training, and should their services in this way happily never be required, the country would still have the satisfaction of seeing its young male population immensely benefited in health, strength, appearance, and general manliness. If carried out at all schools, it would become the favourite pastime of the boys. H. Eyre, Lieutenant-general.

Birkbeck Schools, Kingsland, N., March 7, 1871.

For some years past all the boys and girls of these schools have been put through a course of systematic drill, such as that laid down in Sergeant-major Browne's book. The results have been in the highest degree satisfactory. Not only is the physical condition of the children greatly improved, but the discipline of the drill-ground produces habits of obedience and attention, which, carried into the school-room, conduce greatly to the mental progress of the children, as well as materially aid in maintaining order. Until the time shall come when the Government shall wisely insist upon every child being efficiently drilled, schoolmasters who have not yet tried the experiment will do well to do so without delay.

Of course it is of the utmost importance that the drill-instructor should not be a mere martinet. He must be able to convey his instructions clearly and pleasantly; have an unlimited supply of patience, and show that he really takes an interest in his work.

It has been our good fortune for some years to have secured the services of Sergeant-major Browne, the author of this little book ("Setting-up Drill," &c.), who is not only assiduous in performing his duties, but who is fond of his work, and shows it, and, therefore, succeeds admirably. James Runtz, Head Master.

Kingsland Middle Class Schools, Sandringham-road, March 7, 1871.

Physical exercise is undoubtedly one of the requisites of youth, and if such exercise be enacted with a purpose, it is not only productive of health to the body, but also induces habits of order and energy. In our schools the system of drill instruction has been adopted with the best results, and I am quite convinced that any school would be the better for its introduction. Of course a great deal depends upon the drill-instructor; but if such an one as ours (Sergeant-major Browne, who is thoroughly fond of the work, and at the same time a strict disciplinarian and a perfect gentleman), be obtained, the result will be all that can be desired.

Robert Lane, Head Master.

Southgate-road Middle Class School, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

It is fortunate in the present day there is but little need for insisting upon this physical training of youth, as its importance is so generally recognised. To insure success, however, it is indispensable that it should be conducted by well-qualified instructors, such as are apt to teach, of gentlemanly manners and good disciplinarians. From my observations of Sergeant-major Browne, I am able to testify to his possession of these qualifications, and have very great pleasure in recommending his system of drill to those who may be desirous of introducing physical exercises into their schools.

Thomas Wilson, F.R.G.S., Head Master.

Finishing Establishment for Young Ladies, Benyon-house, 32, Culford-road, De Beauvoir-town, N., March 6, 1871.

Mrs. Aldam has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficiency of Sergeant-major Browne's method of drilling, and as possessing not only great patience, but also consideration for the strength of the pupils, that no undue fatigue is occasioned, no too sudden a strain upon the muscles of growing children, eager, perhaps, to outdo their schoolfellows, a point too frequently overlooked, when a large number are being drilled.

AN ANALYTICAL HISTORY OF INDIA.

FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE ABOLITION OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY IN 1858.

By ROBERT SEWELL, Madras Civil Service.

Post 8vo., pp. 29 and 331. 8s.

 The object of this work is to supply the want which has been felt by students for a condensed outline of Indian History which would serve at once to recall the memory and guide the eye, while at the same time it has been attempted to render it interesting to the general reader by preserving a medium between a bare analysis and a complete history.

London: Wm. H. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, S.W.
